CONY-CATCHER. n. f. A thief; a cheat; a sharper; a tricking fellow; a rascal. Obsolete.

TO COO. v. n. [from the sound.] To cry as a dove or pigeon.

The stockdove only through the forest coos, Mournfully hoarse. Thomson's Summer.

COOK. n. f. [coquus, Lat.] One whose profession is to dress and prepare victuals for the table.

One mistress Quickly is in the manner of his nurse, or his dry-nurse, or his host, or his laundry, his wather, and his wringer. Shakespeare.

The new-born babe by nurses overlaid,
And the cook caught within the raging fire he made. Dryden.

Their cooks could make artificial birds and fishes, in default of the real ones, and which exceeded them in the exquisiteness of the taste. Arbuthnot on Coins.

COOK-MAID. n. f. [cook and maid.] A maid that dresses provisions.

A friend was complaining to me, that his wife had turned off one of the best cook-maids in England. Addison.

COOK-ROOM. n. f. [cook and room.] A room in which provisions are prepared for the ship's crew; the kitchen of a ship.

The commodity of this new cook-room the merchants having found to be so great, as that in all their ships the cook-rooms are built in their fore-castles, contrary to that which had been anciently used. Raleigh's Essays.

TO COOK. v. a. [coquo, Lat.]

1. To prepare victuals for the table.

Had either of the crimes been cooked to their palates, they might have changed messes. Deacy of Piety.

2. To prepare for any purpose.

Hanging is the word, fir; if you be ready for that, you are well cooked. Shakespeare.

COOKERY. n. f. [from cook.] The art of dressing victuals.

Some man's wit

Found th' art of cookery to delight his sense:
More bodies are consum'd and kill'd with it,
Than with the sword, famine, or pestilence. Dan.
Ev'ry one to cookery pretends. King's Cookery.
These are the ingredients of plants before they are prepared by cookery. Arbuthnot.

COOL. adj. [koelen, Dutch.]

1. Somewhat cold; approaching to cold. He set his leg in a pail-full, as hot as he could well endure it, renewing it as it grew cool. Temple.

2. Not zealous; not ardent; not angry; not fond; without passion: as, a cool friend; a cool deceiver.

COOL. n. f. Freedom from heat; soft and refreshing coldness.

But see where Lucia, at her wonted hour,
Amid the cool of yon high maible arch,
Enjoys the noon-day breeze. Addison.

Philander was enjoying the cool of the morning, among the dews that lay on every thing about him, and that gave the air a freshness. Addison.

TO COOL. v. a. [koelen, Dutch.]

1. To make cool; to allay heat.

Snow they use in Naples instead of ice, because, as they say, it cools or congeals any liquor soon. Addison on Italy.

Jelly of currants, or the jelly of any ripe subacid fruit, is cooling, and very agreeable to the stomach. Arbuthnot on Diet.

2. To quiet passion; to calm anger; to moderate zeal.

My lord Northumberland will soon be cool'd. Shakespeare's Henry iv.

He will keep his jealousy to himself, and repine in private, because he will be apt to fear some ill effect it may produce in cooling your love to him. Addison's Spectator.

Had they thought they had been fighting only other people's quarrels, perhaps it might have cool'd their zeal. Swift.

TO COOL. v. n.

1. To grow less hot.

2. To grow less warm with regard to passion or inclination.

My humour shall not cool; I will incense Ford to deal with poison; I will possess him with yellowness. Shakespeare.

You never cool while you read Homer. Dryden.
I'm impatient till it be done; I will not give myself liberty to think, lest I should cool. Congreve's Old Bachelor.

COOLER. n. f. [from cool.]

1. That which has the power of cooling the body.

Coolers are of two sorts; first, those which produce an immediate sense of cold, which are such as have their parts in less motion than those of the organs of feeling; and secondly, such as, by particular viscosity, or grossness of parts, give a greater consistence to the animal fluids than they had before, whereby they cannot move so fast, and therefore will have less of that intestine force on which their heat depends. The former are fruits, all acid liquors, and common water; and the latter are such as cucumbers, and all substances producing viscosity. Quincy.

In dogs or cats there appeared the same necessity for a cooler as in man. Huxley.

Acid things were used only as coolers. Abundance on Aliments.

2. A vessel in which any thing is made cool.

Your first wort being thus boiled, lade off into one or more coolers, or cool-backs, in which leave the sillage behind, and let it run off fine. Mortimer's Husbandry.

COOLLY. adv. [from cool.]

1. Without heat, or sharp cold.

She in the gelid caverns, woodbine wrought,
And fresh bedew'd with ever-sprouting streams, Sits coolly calm. Thomson's Summer.

2. Without passion.

Motives that address themselves coolly to our reason, are fitted to be employed upon reasonable creatures. Albion.

COOLNESS. n. f. [from cool.]

1. Gentle cold; a soft or mild degree of cold.

This difference consisteth not in the heat or coolness of spirits; for cloves and other spices, naptha, and petroleum, have exceeding hot spirits, hotter a great deal than oil, wax, or tallow, but not inflamed. Bacon's Natural History.

The toad loveth shade and coolness. Bacon.
Yonder the harvest of cold months laid up,
Gives a flesh coolness to the royal cup;
There ice, like crystal, firm and never lost, Tempereth hot July with December's frost. Waller.
The sheep enjoy the coolness of the shade. Dryden's Virgil.

2. Want of affection; disinclination.

They parted with such coolness towards each other, as if they scarce hoped to meet again. Clarendon.

3. Freedom from passion.

COOP. n. f. [kuype, Dutch.]

1. A barrel; a vessel for the preservation of liquids.

2. A cage; a penn for animals, as poultry or sheep.

Gracchus was slain the day the chickens refused to eat out of the coop; and Claudius Pulcher underwent the like success, when he contemned the tripudial augurations. Brown.

There were a great many crammed capons together in a coop. L'Estrange.

To COOP. v. a. [from the noun.] To shut up in a narrow compass; to confine; to cage; to imprison: when it is used absolutely, it has often, perhaps always, the intensive particle up.

That pale, that white-fac'd shore,
Whose foot spurns back the ocean's roaring tides,
And coops from other lands her islanders. Shakspeare.

The Englishmen did coop up the lord Ravensstein, that he starved not; and likewise held in strict siege the town. Bacon.

In the taking of a town the poor escape better than the rich; for the one is let go, and the other is plundered and cooped up. L'Estrange.

Twice conquer'd cowards, now your shame is shown;

Coop'd up a second time within your town!
Who dare not issue forth in open field. Dryden.
Oae world fustid not Alexander's mind;

Coop'd up he seem'd, in earth and seas confin'd. Dryden's Juvenal

Coop'd up in a narrow isle, observing great
With flattering wizards. Dryden.

The Trojans, coop'd within their walls so long,
Unbar their gates, and issue in a throng. Dryden.

The contempt of all other knowledge, as if it were nothing in comparison of law or physick, of astrology or chymistry, coops the understanding up within narrow bounds, and hinders it from looking abroad into other provinces of the intellectual world. Locke.

They are coop'd in close by the laws of their countries, and the strict guards of those whose interest it is to keep them ignorant. Locke.

What! coop whole armies in our walls again!

Pope.

Societies of artificers and tradesmen, belonging to some towns corporate, such as weavers and coopers, by virtue of their charters, pretend to privilege and jurisdiction. Child.

COOPERAGE. n. f. [from cooper.] The price paid for cooper's work.To COOPERATE. v. n. [con and opera, Latin.]1. To labour jointly with another to the same end: it has with before the agent, and to before the end.

It puzzleth and perplexeth the conceits of many, that perhaps would otherwise cooperate with him, and makes a man walk almost alone to his own end. Bacon.

By giving man a free will, he allows man that highest satisfaction and privilege of cooperating to his own felicity. Boyle.

2. To concur in producing the same effect.

His mercy will not forgive offenders, or his benignity cooperate to their conversions. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

All these causes cooperating, mult, at last, weaken their motion. Cheyne.

The special acts and impressions by which the Divine Spirit introduces this change, and how far human liberty cooperates with it, are subjects beyond our comprehension. Rogers.

COOPERATION. n. f. [from cooperate.]

The act of contributing or concurring to the same end.

We might work any effect without and against matter; and this not holpen by the cooperation of angels or spirits, but only by the unity and harmony of nature. Bacon's Natural History.

COOPERATIVE. adj. [from cooperate.]

Promoting the same end jointly.

COOPERATOR. n. f. [from cooperate.] He that, by joint endeavours, promotes the same end with others.

COOPTATION. n. f. [coopto, Lat.] Adoption; assumption.COORDINATE. adj. [con and ordina, Lat.] Holding the same rank; not being subordinate. Thus shellfish may be divided into two coordinate kinds, crustaceous and testaceous; each of which is again divided into many species, subordinate to the kind, but coordinate to each other.

The word Analysis signifies the general and particular heads of a discourse, with their mutual connexions, both coordinate and subordinate, drawn out into one or more tables. Watts.

COORDINATELY. adv. [from coordinate.]

In the same rank; in the same relation; without subordination.

COORDINATENESS. n. f. [from coordinate.] The state of being coordinate.COORDINATION. n. f. [from coordinate.]

The state of holding the same rank; of standing in the same relation to something higher; collateralness.

In this high court of parliament there is a rare coordination of power, a wholesome mixture betwixt monarchy, optimacy, and democracy. Newton's Pre-eminence of Parliament.

When these petty intrigues of a play are so ill ordered, that they have no coherence with the other, I must grant that Lydinus has reason to tax that want of due connexion; for coordination in a play is as dangerous and unnatural as in a state. Dryden on Dramatick Poetry.

COOT. n. f. [maer-coet, Dut. colée, Fr.] A small black waterfowl, seen often in fens and marshes.

A lake, the haunt
Of coots, and of the sitting cormorant. Dryden.

COP. n. f. [kop, Dut. cop, Sax.] The head; the top of any thing; any thing rising to a head: as, a cop, vulgarly cock, of hay; a cop-castle, properly cop-castle, a small castle or house on a hill; a cob of cherry-stones, for cop, a pile of stones one laid upon another; a tuft on the head of birds.CO'PAL. n. f. The Mexican term for a gum.COPARCENARY. n. f. [from coparcener.] Joint succession to any inheritance.

In descent to all the daughters in coparcenary, for want of sons, the chief house is allotted to the eldest daughter. Hale.

COPARCENER. n. f. [from con and particeps, Lat.]

Coparceners are otherwise called parceners; and, in common law, are such as have equal portion in the inheritance of the ancestor. Cowell.

This great lordship was broken and divided, and partition made between the five daughters: in every of these portions, the coparceners severally exercised the same jurisdiction royal, which the earl marshal and his sons had used in the whole province. Davies on Ireland.

COPARCENY. n. f. An equal share of coparceners. Phillips' World of Words.COPARTNER. n. f. [co and partner.]

One that has a share in some common stock or affair; one equally concerned; a sharer; a partaker; a partner. Milton has used it both with of and in.

Our faithful friends,

Th' associates and copartners of our loss. Milton.

Shall I to him make known

As yet my change, and give him to partake

Full happiness with me? Or rather not;

But keep the odds of knowledge in my power,
Without copartner. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Rather by them

I gain'd what I have gain'd, and with them dwell

Copartner in these regions of the world. Milton.

COPARTNERSHIP. n. f. [from copartner.]

The state of bearing an equal part, or possessing an equal share.

In case the father left only daughters, the daughters equally succeeded to their father as in copartnership. Hale.

CO'PATAIN. adj. [from cop.] High raised; pointed. Hanmer.

Oh, fine villain! a silken doublet, a velvet hose, a scarlet cluke, and a copatain hat. Shakspeare.

COPAYVA. n. f. [It is sometimes written capivi, copiov, capayva, copayva, cupayva, cupayba.] A gum which distils from a tree in Brasil. It is much used in disorders of the urinary passages.

COPE. n. f. [See Cop.]

1. Any thing with which the head is covered.

2. A sacerdotal cloak, or vestment worn in sacred ministration.

3. Any thing which is spread over the head; as the concave of the skies; any archwork over a door.

All these things that are contained Within this goodly cope, both moist and least,
Their being here, and daily are increas'd. Spenser.

Over head the dismal life
Of fiery darts in flaming volleys flew,
And tying vaulted either hoit with fire;
So, under fiery cope, together rush'd
Both battles main. Milton's Paradise Lost.
The scholar believes there is no man under the cope of heaven, who is so knowing as his

TO COPE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover, as with a cope.

A very large bridge, that is all made of wood, and coped over head. Addison on Italy.

2. To contend with; to oppose.

Know my name is lost,
By treason's tooth bare gnawn, and canker-bit;
Yet am I noble as the adversary
I come to cope. Shakespeare's King Lear.

3. To reward; to give in return.

I and my friend
Have, by your wisdom, been this day acquitted
Of grievous penalties; in lieu whereof,
Thrice thousand ducats, due unto the Jew,
We freely cope your courteous pains withal. Shakespeare.

TO COPE. v. n.

1. To contend; to struggle; to strive. It has with before the thing or person opposed. [In this sense it is a word of doubtful etymology. The conjecture of Junius derives it from koopen, to buy, or some other word of the same import; so that to cope with signifies to interchange blows, or any thing else, with another.]

Let our trains
March by us, that we may peruse the men
We should have cop'd withal. Shakspeare, Henry IV.
It is likely thou wilt undertake
A thing, like death, to chide away this shame,
That copes with death itself, to 'scape from it. Shakespeare.

But Eve was Eve;
This far his over-match, who, self-deceiv'd
And rash, beforehand had no better weigh'd
The strength he was to cope with, or his own. Milton.

They perfectly understood both the hares and the enemy they were to cope withal. L'Estrange.

On every plain,
Host cop'd with host, dire was the din of war. Philips.

Their generals have not been able to cope with the troops of Athens, which I have conducted. Addison's Whig Examiner.

If the mind apply itself first to easier subjects, and things near a-kim to what is already known;
and then advance to the more remote and knotty parts of knowledge by flow degrees, it will be able, in this manner, to cope with great difficulties, and prevail over them with amazing and happy success. Watts on the Mind.

2. To encounter; to interchange kindness or sentiments.

Thou fresh piece
Of excellent witchcraft, who of force must know
The royal fool thou cop'st with. Shakspeare.
Thou art e'en as just a man,
As e'er my conversation cop'd withal. Shakspeare.

TO COPE. v. a. To embrace. Not in use.

I will make him tell the tale anew;
Where, how, how oft, how long ago, and when;
He hath, and is again to cope your wife. Shakspeare.

COPEMATE. n. f. [perhaps for outmate, a companion in drinking, or one that dwells under the same cope, for house.]

Companion; friend. An old word.
Ne ever staid in place, ne spake to wight,
Till that the fox his copemate he had found. Hubbert's Tale.

COPIER. n. f. [from copy.]

1. One that copies; a transcriber.

A coin is in no danger of having its characters altered by copiers and transcribers. Addison.

2. One that imitates; a plagiarist; an imitator.

Without invention a painter is but a copier, and a poet but a plagiarist of others. Dryden.

Let the faint copier, on old Tiber's shore,
Nor mean the task, each breathing bust explore;
Line after line with painful patience trace,
This Roman grandeur, that Attic grace. Tickel.

CO'PING. n. f. [from cope.] The upper tire of masonry which covers the wall.

All these were of costly stones, even from the foundation unto the coping. Kings.

The coping, the modillions, or dentils, make a noble show by their graceful projections. Addison's Architect.

COPIOUS. adj. [copia, Lat.]

1. Plentiful; abundant; exuberant; in great quantities.

Rose, as in dance, the stately trees, and spread
Their branches hung with copious fruit. Milton.
Full measure only bounds Excess, before the all-bounteous king, who show'd

With copious hand, rejoicing in their joy. Milton.

This alkaline acrimony indicates the copious use of vinegar and acid fruits. Arbuthnot.

The tender heart is peace,
And kindly pours its copious treasures forth
In various converse. Thompson's Spring.

2. Abounding in words or images; not barren; not confined; not concise.

Hail, Son of God, Saviour of men! thy name
Shall be the copious matter of my song
Henceforth, and never shall my harp thy praise
Forget, nor from thy Father's praise disjoin. Milton.

CO'PIOUSLY. adv. [from copious.]

1. Plentifully; abundantly; in great quantities.

2. At large; without brevity or conciseness; fully.

It remains have been so copiously detected by a multitude of travellers, and other writers, that it is very difficult to make any new conjectures on this subject. Addison.

COPIOUSNESS. n. f. [from copious.]

1. Plenty; abundance; great quantity; exuberance.

2. Diffusion; exuberance of style.

The Roman orator endeavoured to imitate the copiousness of Homer, and the Latin poet made it his business to reach the conciseness of Demosthenes. Dryden.

COPIST. n. f. [from copy.] A copier; a transcriber; an imitator.

CO'PLAND. n. f. A piece of ground which terminates with an acute angle.

CO'PPED. adj. [from cop.] Rising to a top or head.

It was broad in its basis, and rose copped like a sugar-loaf. Wise man's Surgeon.

A galeated eschinus being copped and somewhat conic. Woodward.

CO'PPEL. n. f. [This word is variously spelt: as copel, cupel, cuple, and cuppel; but I cannot find its etymology.] An instrument used in chymistry, in the form of a dish, made of ashes, well washed, to cleanse them from all their salt; or of bones thoroughly calcined.

Its use is to try and purify gold and silver, which is done by mingling lead with the metal, and exposing it in the coppel to a violent fire a long while.

The impurities of the metal will then be carried off in dross, which is called the litharge of gold and silver. The refiners call the coppel a test. Harris.

be carried off in dross, which is called
the litharge of gold and silver. The refiners call the coppel a test. Harris.

CO'PPER. n. f. [koper, Dutch; cuprum, Latin.] One of the six primitive metals.

Copper is the most ductile and malleable metal after gold and silver. Of a mixture of copper and lapis calaminaris is formed brass; a composition of copper and tin makes bell-metal; and copper and brass, melted in equal quantities, produces what the French call bronze, used for figures and statues. Chambers.

Copper is heavier than iron or tin; but lighter than silver, lead, and gold. Hill on Metals.

Two vessels of fine copper, precious as gold.

CO'PPER. n. f. A vessel made of copper; commonly used for a boiler larger than a moveable pot.

They boiled it in a copper to the half; then they poured it into earthen vessels. Ramus.

CUPPER-NOSE. n. f. [copper and nose.] A red nose.

He having colour enough, and the other higher, is too flaming a praise for a good complexion: I had as lieve Helen's golden tongue had commended Troilus for a copper-nose. Shakspeare.

Gouty rosacea ariseth in little hard tubercles, affecting the face all over with great itching, which, being scratched, looks red, and rises in great welks, rendering the visage fiery; and makes copper-noses, as we generally express them. Wise man.

COPPER-PLATE. n. f. A plate on which pictures are engraven for the neater im- pression, distinguished from a wooden cut.

COPPER-WORK. n. f. [copper and work.] A place where copper is worked or ma- nufactured.

CO'PPERAS. n. f. [kopperoofe, Dut. cou- perouse, Fr. supposed to be found in copper mines only.] A name given to three sorts of vitriol; the green, the bluish green, and the white, which are produced in the mines of Germany, Hungary, and other countries. But what is commonly sold here for copperas, is an artificial vitriol, made of a kind of stones found on the sea-shore in Es- sex, Hampshire, and so westward, ordi- narily called gold stones from their colour. They abound with iron, and are exposed to the weather in beds above ground, and receive the rains and dews, which in time breaks and dissolves the stones: the liquor that runs off is pumped into boilers, in which is first put old iron, which, in boiling, dissolves. This fæcitious copperas, in many respects, agrees with the native green vitriol. Chambers. Hill.

It may be questioned, whether, in this operation, the iron or copperas be transmuted, from the cognation of copperas with copper, and the iron remaining after conversion. Brown.

CO'PPERSMITH. n. f. [copper and smith.] One that manufactures copper.

Salmonius, as the Grecian tale is,
Was a mad copper-smith of his;
Up at his forge by morning peep. Swift.

CO'PPERWORM. n. f. [seredo, Lat.]

1. A little worm in ships.

2. A worm that fretteth garments.

3. A worm breeding in one's hand.

Ainworth.

COPPERY. adj. [from copper.] Containing copper; made of copper.

Some springs of Hungary, highly impregnated with vitriolick salts, dissolve the body of iron put into the spring, and deposite, in lieu of the iron particles carried off, coppery particles brought with the water out of the neighbouring copper-mines. Woodward on Fossils.

COPPICE. n. f. [coupeaux, Fr. from couper, to cut or lop. It is often written copse.] A low wood cut at stated times for fuel; a place overrun with brushwood.

A land, each side whereof was bounded both with high timber trees, and copses of far more humble growth. Sidney.

Upon the edge of yonder coppice,
A stand, where you may have the fairest shoot. Shakspeare.

In coppice woods, if you leave faddles too thick, they run to bushes and briars, and have little clean underwood. Bacon.

The willows, and the hazel copses green,
Shall now no more be seen Fanning their joyous leaves to their soft lays. Milton.

Raise trees in your seminaries and nurseries, and you may transplant them for coppice ground, walks, or hedges. Mortimer's H. Landry.

The rate of coppice lands will fall upon the discovery of coalmines. Locke.

COPPLE-DUST. n. f. [probably for coppel, or cupel dust.] Powder used in purifying metals, or the gross parts separated by the cupel.

It may be also tried by incorporating powder of steel, or apple-dust, by pounding into the quicksilver. Bacon.

COPPLE-STONES are lumps and fragments of stone or marble, broke from the adjacent cliffs, rounded by being bowled and tumbled to and again by the action of the water. Woodward.

COPPLED. adj. [from cop.] Rising in a conick form; rising to a point.

There is some difference in this shape, some being flatter on the top, others more coppied. Woodward on Fossils.

COPSE. n. f. [abbreviated from coppice.] A low wood cut at a certain growth for fuel; a place overgrown with short wood.

The east quarters of the shire are not destitute of copse woods. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

Oaks and brambles, if the copse be burn'd,
Confounded lie, to the same ashes turn'd. Waller.

But in what quarter of the copse it lay,
His eye by certain level could survey. Dryden.

TO COPSE. v. a. [from the noun.] To preserve underwoods.

The neglect of copping wood cut down, hath been of very evil consequence. Swift.

COPULA. n. f. [Latin.] The word which unites the subject and predicate of a proposition: as, books are dear.

The copula is the term of a proposition; it represents the act of the mind, affirming or denying. Watts's Logic.

TO COPULATE. v. a. [copulo, Lat.] To unite; to conjoin; to link together.

If the force of custom, simple and separate, be great, the force of custom copulate, and conjoined, and collegiate, is far greater. Bacon.

TO COPULATE. v. n. To come together as different sexes.

Not only the persons so copulating are infected, but also their children. Hilman.

COPULATION. n. f. [from copulate.] The congress or embrace of the two sexes.

Sundry kinds, even of conjugal copulation, are prohibited as unhoneft. Hooker.

COPULATIVE. adj. [copulativus, Latin.] A term of grammar.

Copulative propositions are those which have more subjects or predicates connected by affirmative or negative conjunctions: as, riches and honours are temptations to pride; Caesar conquered the Gauls and the Britons; neither gold nor jewels will purchase immortality. Watts.

COPY. n. f. [copie, Fr. copia, low Latin; quod cuiquam facta est copia exscribendi.] Junius inclines, after his manner, to derive it from κόπος, labour; because, says he, to copy another's writing is very painful and laborious.]

1. A tranfcript from the archetype or original.

If virtue's self were lost, we might
From your fair mind new copies write. Waller.
I have not the vanity to think my copy equal to the original. Denham.

He slept forth, not only the copy of God's hands, but also the copy of his perfections, a kind of image or representation of the Deity in small. South's Sermons.

The Romans having sent to Athens, and the Greek cities of Italy, for copies of the best laws, chose ten legislators to put them into form. Swift.

2. An individual book; one of many books: as, a good or fair copy.

The very having of the books of God was a matter of no small charge, as they could not be had otherwise than in written copies. Hooker.

3. The autograph; the original; the archetype; that from which any thing is copied.

It was the copy of our conference:
In bed he slept not for my urging it;
At board he fed not for my urging it. Shakspeare.

Let him first learn to write, after a copy, all the letters in the vulgar alphabet. Holder.

The first of them I have forgotten, and cannot easily retrieve, because the copy is at the press. Dryden.

4. An instrument by which any conveyance is made in law.

Thou know'st that Banquo and his Fleance lives;
But in them nature's copy's not eternal. Shakspeare.

5. A picture drawn from another picture.

COPY-BOOK. n. f. [copy and book.] A book in which copies are written for learners to imitate.

COPY-HOLD. n. f. [copy and hold.] A tenure, for which the tenant hath nothing to show but the copy of the rolls made by the steward of his lord's court: for the steward, as he enrolls other things done in the lord's court, so he registers such tenants as are admitted in the court, to any parcel of land or tenement belonging to the manor; and the tranfcript of this is called the court roll, the copy of which the tenant takes from him, and keeps as his only evidence.

Copy-hold is called a base tenure, because it holds at the will of the lord; yet not simply, but according to the custom of the manor: so that if a copy-holder break not the custom of the manor, and thereby forfeit his tenure, he cannot be turned out at the lord's pleasure. These customs of manors vary, in one point or other, almost in every manor. Some copy-holds are hereditary, and some certain: that which is hereditary, the lord rates at what time or income he pleases, when the tenant is admitted into it; that which is certain, is a kind of inheritance, and called in many places customary; because the tenant dying, and the hold being void, the next of blood paying the customary fine, as two shillings for an acre, or so, cannot be denied his admission. Some copy-holders have, by custom, the wood growing upon their own land, which by law they could not have. Some hold by the verge in ancient demesne; and though they hold by copy, yet are they, in account, a kind of freeholder; for, if such a one commit felony, the king hath annum, diem, and vestrum, as in case of freehold. Some others hold by common tenure, called mere copy-hold; and they committing felony, their land escheats to the lord of the manor. Corwell.

If a customary tenant die, the widow shall have what the law calls her free bench in all his copy-hold lands. Addison.

COPY-HOLDER. n. f. [from copyhold.] One that is possessed of land in copyhold.

TO COPY. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To transcribe; to write after an original: it has sometimes out, a kind of pleonasm.

He who hurts a harmless neighbour's peace,
Who loves a lye, lame slander helps about,
Who writes a libel, or who copies out. Pope.

2. To imitate; to propose to imitation; to endeavour to resemble.

He that borrows other men's experience, with this design of copying it out, possesses himself of one of the greatest advantages. Decay of Piety.

Set the examples, and their souls inflame
To copy out their great forefathers fame. Dryden.

To copy her few nymphs aspir'd,
Her virtues fewer swains admur'd. Swift.

TO COPY. v. n.

1. To do any thing in imitation of something else.

Some imagine, that whatsoever they find in the picture of a master, who has acquired reputation, must of necessity be excellent; and nevertheless fail, when they copy, to follow the bad as well as the good things. Dryden's Dovesbury.

2. It has sometimes from before the thing imitated.

When a painter copies from the life, he has no privilege to alter features and lineaments, under pretence that his picture will look better. Dryden.

3. Sometimes after.

Several of our countrymen, and Mr. Dryden in particular, seem very often to have copied after it in their dramatick writings, and in their poems upon love. Addison's Spectator.

TO COQUET. v. a. [from the noun.] To entertain with compliments and amorous tattle; to treat with an appearance of amorous tenderness.

You are coquetting a maid of honour, my lord looking on to see how the gamblers play, and I railing at you both. Swift.

TO COQUET. v. n. To act the lover; to entice by blandishments.

Phyllis, who but a month ago
Was married to the Tunbridge lere,
I saw coquetting t'other night,
In publick, with that odious knight. Swift.

COQUETRY. n. f. [coqueterie, Fr.] Affectation of amorous advances; desire of attracting notice.

I was often in company with a couple of charming women, who had all the wit and beauty one could desire in female companions, without a dash of coquetry, that from time to time gave me a great many agreeable torments. Addison.

COQUETTES. n. f. [coquette, Fr. from coquart, a prattler.] A gay, airy girl; a girl who endeavours to attract notice.

The light coquettes in Solipsis shew repairs,
And sport and flatter in the fields of air. Pope.
A coquette and a tinder-box are sparkled. Swift.

COR

Co'RACLE. n. f. [cowrle, Welsh; probably from corium, leather, Lat.] A boat used in Wales by fishers, made by drawing leather or oiled cloth upon a frame of wicker work.

CORAL. n. f. [corallium, Latin.]

1. Red coral is a plant of as great hardness and stony nature, while growing in the water, as it has after long exposure to the air. The vulgar opinion, that coral is soft while in the sea, proceeds from a soft and thin coat, of a crustaceous matter, covering it while it is growing, and which is taken off before it is packed up for use. The whole coral plant grows to a foot or more in height, and is variously ramified. It is thickest at the stem, and its branches grow gradually smaller. It grows to stones, without a root, or without any way penetrating them; but as it is found to grow, and take in its nourishment, in the manner of plants, and to produce flowers and seeds, or at least a matter analogous to seeds, it properly belongs to the vegetable kingdom. Hill's Mat. Med.

In the sea, upon the south-west of Sicily, much coral is found. It is a submarine plant; it hath no leaves; it brancheth only when it is under water. It is soft, and green of colour; but being brought into the air, it becometh hard and shining red, as we see. Bacon.

This gentleman, desirous to find the nature of coral, caused a man to go down a hundred fathoms into the sea, with express orders to take notice whether it were hard or soft in the place where it groweth. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

He hears the crackling sound of coral woods, And sees the secret source of subterranean floods. Dryden's Virgil.

A turret was inclos'd Within the wall, of alabaster white, And crimson coral, for the queen of night, Who takes in Sylvan sports her chaste delight. Dryden.

Or where's the sense, direct or moral, That teeth are pearly, or lips are coral? Prior.

2. The piece of coral which children have about their necks, imagined to assist them in breeding teeth.

Her infant grandame's coral next it grew; The bells she ginged, and the whistle blew. Pope.

CORAL-TREE. n. f. [corallodendron, Lat.] It is a native of America, and produces very beautiful scarlet flowers; but never any seeds in the European gardens. Miller.

Co'RALLINE. adj. [corallinus, Lat.] Consisting of coral; approaching to coral.

At such time as the sea is agitated, it takes up into itself terretial matter of all kinds, and in particular the coralline matter, letting it fall again, as it becomes calm. Woodward.

Co'RALLINE. n. f. [from the adjective.] Coralline is a sea plant used in medicine; but much inferior to the coral in hardness, sometimes greenish, sometimes yellowish, often reddish, and frequently white. Hill.

In Falmouth there is a sort of sand, or rather coralline, that lies under the oar. Mortimer.

Co'RALLOID. } adj. [coralloideus, Lat.] Resembling coral.

Co'RALLOIDAL. } adj. [coralloidalis, Lat.] Resembling coral.

Now that plants and ligneous bodies may indurate under water, without approachment of air, we have experiment in coralline, with many coralloidal concretions. Brown.

The pentadrous, columnar, coralloidal bodies, that are composed of plates set lengthways of the body, and passing from the surface to the axis of it. Woodward on Fossils.

CORANT. n. f. [corant, Fr.] A lofty sprightly dance.

It is harder to dance a corant well than a jig; so in conversation, even, easy, and agreeable, more than points of wit. Temple.

I would as soon believe a widow in great grief for her husband, because I saw her dance a corant about his coffin. Wals.

Co'RBAN. n. f. [קרבה, Heb.] An alms-basket; a receptacle of charity; a gift; an alms.

They think to satisfy all obligations to duty by their corban of religion. King Charles.

Corban stands for an offering or gift made to God, or his temple. The Jews sometimes swore by corban, or the gifts offered unto God. If a man made all his fortune corban, or devoted it to God, he was forbidden to use it. If all that he was to give his wife, or his father and mother, was declared corban, he was no longer permitted to allow them necessary subsistence. Even debtors were permitted to defraud their creditors, by consecrating their debt to God. Our Saviour reproaches the Jews, in the gospel, with these uncharitable and irreligious vows. By this word such persons were likewise meant, as devoted themselves to the service of God and his temple. Corban signifies also the treasury of the temple, where the offerings, which were made in money, were deposited. Chambers.

CORBE. adj. [corbe, Fr.] Crooked.

For fike thy head very tottie is, So thy corbe shoulder it leans amiss. Spenser.

Co'RBEILS. n. f. Little baskets used in fortification, filled with earth, and set upon the parapet, to shelter the men in firing upon the besiegers.

Co'RBEL. n. f. [In architecture.] The representation of a basket, sometimes placed on the heads of the caryatides.

Co'RBEL. } n. f.

CORD. n. f. [cort, Welsh; corda, Lat. corde, Fr.]

1. A rope; a string composed of several strands or twigs.

She let them down by a cord through the window. Johnson.

Form'd of the finest complicated thread, These num'rous *corde*s are thro' the body spread. Blackmore.

2. The cords extended in setting up tents, furnish several metaphors in scripture.

Thine eyes shall see Jerusalem a quiet habitation, a tabernacle that shall not be taken down; none of the stakes thereof shall ever be removed, neither shall any of the *corde*s thereof be broken. Habak.

3. A quantity of wood for fuel, supposed to be measured with a cord; a pile eight feet long, four high, and four broad.

CORD-MAKER. n. f. [cord and make.] One whose trade is to make ropes; a ropemaker.

CORD-WOOD. n. f. [cord and wood.] Wood piled up for fuel, to be sold by the cord.

To CORD. v. a. [from the noun.] To bind with ropes; to fasten with cords; to close by a bandage.

COR

Co'RDAGE. n. f. [from cord.] A quantity of cords; the ropes of a ship.

Our cordage from her store, and cables, should be made,

Of any in that kind most fit for marine trade. Drayton.

They fastened their ships, and rid at anchor with cables or iron chains, having neither canvas nor cordage. Raleigh.

Spain furnished a sort of rush called spartum, useful for cordage and other parts of shipping. Ambrose on Spain.

Co'RDED. adj. [from cord.] Made of ropes.

This might be meant, with a corded ladder, To climb celestial Silvia's chamber window. Shakespeare.

Co'RDELIER. n. f. A Franciscan friar; so named from the cord which serves him for a cincture.

And who to assist but a grave cordelier. Prior.

Co'RDIAL. n. f. [from cor, the heart, Latin.]

1. A medicine that increases the force of the heart, or quickens the circulation.

2. Any medicine that increases strength.

A cordial, properly speaking, is not always what increaseth the force of the heart; for, by increasing that, the animal may be weakened, as in inflammatory diseases. Whatever increaseth the natural or animal strength, the force of moving the fluids and muscles, is a cordial: these are such substances as bring the serum of the blood into the proper condition for circulation and nutrition; as broths made of animal substances, milk, ripe fruits, and whatever is endued with a wholesome but not pungent taste. Arbutnot on Aliment.

3. Any thing that comforts, gladdens, and exhilarates.

Then with some cordials seek for to appease The inward languor of my wounded heart, And then my body shall have shortly ease; But such sweet cordials pass physicians art. Spenser.

Cordials of pity give me now, For I too weak for purges grow. Cowley.

Your warrior offspring that upheld the crown, The scarlet honour of your peaceful gown, Are the most pleasing objects I can find, Charms to my sight, and cordials to my mind. Dryden.

Co'RDIAL. adj.

1. Reviving; invigorating; restorative.

It is a thing I make, which hath the king Five times redeem'd from death: I do not know What is more cordial. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

He only took cordial waters, in which we infused sometimes purgatives. Wifemen.

2. Sincere; hearty; proceeding from the heart; without hypocrisy.

Doctrines are infused among christians, which are apt to obstruct or intercept the cordial superstrueting of christian life of renovation, where the foundation is duly laid. Hammond.

He, with looks of cordial love, Hung over her enamour'd. Milnes.

Co'RDIALITY. n. f. [from cordial.]

1. Relation to the heart

That the antients had any such respects of cordiality, or reference unto the heart, will much be doubted. Roscoe.

2. Sincerity; freedom from hypocrisy.

Co'RDIALLY. adv. [from cordial.] Sincerely; heartily; without hypocrisy.

Where a strong inveterate love of sin has made any doctrine or proposition wholly unsuitable to the heart, no argument or demonstration, no nor miracle whatsoever, shall be able to bring the heart cordially to close with, and receive it. South's Sermons.

Co'RDINER. n. f. [cordonnier, Fr.] A shoemaker. It is so used in divers statutes.

CORDON. n. f. [Fr.] In fortification, a row of stones jutting out before the rampart and the basis of the parapet.

Chambers.

C'ORDWAIN. n. f. Cordovan leather, from Cordova in Spain. Spanish leather. Her straight legs most heavily were embay'd In golden buskins of costly cordwain. Fairy Queen.

Give me that man

That is not passion's slave, and I will wear him
In my heart's core; ay, in my heart of heart.

Shakespeare's Hamlet.

2. The inner part of any thing.

In the core of the square she raised a tower of a furlong high. Raleigh's History of the World.

They wafeful eat,

Through buds and bark, into the blacken'd core.

Thomson.

3. The inner part of a fruit which contains the kernels.

It is reported that trees watered perpetually with warm water, will make a fruit with little or no core or stone. Bacon.

4. The matter contained in a boil or sore.

Lance the core,

And cut the head; for, till the core be found,
The secret vice is fed, and gathers ground.

Dryden's Virgil.

5. It is used by Bacon for a body or collection. [from corps, Fr. pronounced core.]

He was more doubtful of the raising of forces to resist the rebels, than of the resistance itself;
for that he was in a core of people whose affections he suspected. Bacon's Henry VII.

CORIA'CEOUS. adj. [coriaceus, Lat.]

1. Consisting of leather.

2. Of a substance resembling leather.

A stronger projectile motion of the blood must occasion greater secretions and lots of liquid parts, and from thence perhaps spirituous and coriaceous concretions. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

CORIA'NDER. n. f. [coriandrum, Latin.]

A plant.

The species are, 1. Greater coriander. 2.
Smaller reticulated coriander. The first is cultivated for the seeds, which are used in medicine: the second sort is seldom found. Miller.
Israel called the name thereof manna; and it was, like coriander seeds, white. Exodus.

COR'INTH. n. f. [from the city of that name in Greece.] A small fruit, commonly called currant.

Now will the corinths, now the raspas supply
Delicious draughts. Philips.

The chief riches of Zant consist in corinths, which the inhabitants have in great quantities.

Broom.

COR'INTHIAN Order.

This is generally reckoned the fourth, but by some the fifth, of the five orders of architecture; and is the most noble, rich, and delicate of them all. Vitruvius ascribes it to Callimachus, a Corinthian sculptor, who is said to have taken the hint by passing by the tomb of a young lady, over which a basket with some of her playthings had been placed by her nurse, and covered with a tile; the whole having been placed over a root of acanthus. As it sprung up, the branches en-
Vol. I.

compassed the basket; but arriving at the tile, bent downwards under the corners of it, forming a kind of volute. Hence Callimachus imitated the basket by the vase of his capital, the tile in the abacus, and the leaves in the volute. Vil-lalpandus imagines the Corinthian capital to have taken its original from an order in the temple of Solomon, whose leaves were those of the palm-tree. The capital is adorned with two rows of leaves, between which little stalks arise, of which the sixteen volutes are formed, which support the abacus. Harris.

Behind these figures are large columns of the Corinthian order, adorned with fruit and flowers.
Dryden.

CORK. n. f. [cortex, Lat. kerck, Dutch.

Hic dies, anno redeunte, festus

Corticeum astritum pice dimovebit

Amphora fumum bibere instituta

Consule Tullo. Hor.]

1. A glandiferous tree, in all respects like the ilex, excepting the bark, which, in the cork tree, is thick, spongy, and soft. Miller.

The cork tree grows near the Pyrenean hills, and in several parts of Italy, and the north of New England. Mortimer.

2. The bark of the cork tree used for stopples, or burnt into Spanish black. It is taken off without injury to the tree.

3. A piece of cork cut for the stopple of a bottle or barrel.

I pry'thee take the cork out of thy mouth, that I may drink thy tidings. Shakespeare.

Be sure, say very sure, thy cork be good;

Then future ages shall of Peggy tell,

That nymph that brew'd and bottled ale so well.

King.

Nor stop, for one had cork, his butler's pay.

Pope.

CORKING-PIN. n. f. A pin of the largest size.

When you put a clean pillow-case on your lady's pillow, be sure to fasten it well with three corking-pins, that it may not fall off in the night. Swift.

COR'KEY. adj. [from cork.] Consisting of cork; resembling cork.

Bind fast his corkey arms. Shakespeare.

CORMORANT. n. f. [cormorant, Fr. from corvus marinus, Latin.]

1. A bird that preys upon fish. It is nearly of the bigness of a capon, with a wry bill and broad feet, black on his body, but greenish about his wings. He is eminently greedy and rapacious.

Let fame, that all hunt after in their lives,

Live register'd upon our brazen tombs;

When, spite of cormorant devouring time,

Th' endeavour of this present breath may buy
That honour which shall 'bate his scythe's keen edge. Shakespeare.

Those called birds of prey, as the eagle, hawk, puttock, and cormorant. Peacock.

Thence up he flew, and on the tree of life

Sat like a cormorant. Milton Par. Lost.

Not far from thence is seen a lake, the haunt
Of coots, and of the fishing cormorant. Dryden.

2. A glutton.

CORN. n. f. [corn, Sax. korn, Germ.

It is found in all the Teutonick dialects;

as, in an old Runick rhyme,

Hagul er kaldastur corna.

Hail is the coldest grain.]

1. The seeds which grow in ears, not in pods; such as are made into bread.

Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone. John.

The people cry you mock'd them; and, of late,
When corn was given them gratis, you repin'd.
Shakespeare.

2. Grain yet unreaped, standing in the field upon its stalk.

All the idle weeds that grow

In our sustaining corn. Shakespeare.

Landing his men, he burnt the corn all thereabouts, which was now almost ripe. Amleir.

Still a murmur runs

Along the soft inclining fields of corn. Thomson.

3. Grain in the ear, yet unthrashed.

Thou shalt come to thy grave in a full age, like as a shock of corn cometh in his season. Job.

4. An excrescence on the feet, hard and painful; probably so called from its form, though by some supposed to be denominated from its corneous or horny substance.

Ladies, that have your feet

Unplagu'd with corns, we'll have a bout with you. Shakespeare.

The man that makes his toe

What he his heart should make,

Shall of a corn cry woe,

And turn his sleep to wake. Shakespeare.

Even in men, aches and hurts and corns do en-grieve either towards rain or towards frost.

Bacon's Natural History.

The hardest part of the corn is usually in the middle, thrusting itself in a nail; whence it has the Latin appellation of clavus. Wifeman.

He first that useful secret did explain,
That pricking corns foretold the gathering rain.

Gay's Jest.

It looks as there were regular accumulations and gatherings of humours, growing perhaps in some people as corns. Arbuthnot.

Thus Lamb, renown'd for cutting corns,

An oft'n'd foe from Radcliff's corns. Swift.

TO CORN. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To salt; to sprinkle with salt. The word is so used, as Skinner observes, by the old Saxons.

2. To granulate.

CORN-FIELD. n. f. A field where corn is growing.

It was a lover and his last,

That o'er the green corn-field did pass. Shakspe.

You may soon enjoy the gallant sights of armies, encampments, and standards waving over your brother's corn-fields. Pope.

CORN-FLAG. n. f. [corn and flag.] A plant. Miller enumerates eleven species of this plant, some with red flowers, and some with white.

CORN-FLOOR. n. f. The floor where corn is stored.

Thou hast loved a reward upon every corn-floor.

Hosca.

CORN-FLOWER. n. f. [from corn and flower.]

There be certain corn-flowers, which come seldom or never in other places, unless they be set, but only amongst corn; as the bluebottle, a kind of yellow marygold, wild poppy, and fusimitory. Bacon's Natural History.

Corn-flowers are of many sorts: some of them
flower in June and July, and others in August.
The seeds should be sown in March; they require a good soil. Mortimer.

CORN-LAND. n. f. [corn and land] Land appropriated to the production of grain.

Pastures and meadows are of such advantage to husbandry, that many prefer them to corn lands. Mortimer's Husbandry.

CORN-MASTER. n. f. [corn and master.]
One that cultivates corn for sale. Not in use.

I knew a nobleman in England, that had the greatest audits of any man in my time; a great grafter, a great sheep-master, a great timberman, a great collier, a great corn-maffer, and a great lead-man. Bacon.

CORN-MARIGOLD. n. f. [from corn and marigold.] A flower.

CORN-MILL. n. f. [corn and mill.] A mill to grind corn into meal.

Save the more laborious work of beating of hemp, by making the axle-tree of the corn-mills longer than ordinary, and placing pins in it to raise large hammers. Mortimer.

CORN-PIPE. n. f. [from corn and pipe.] A pipe made by fitting the joint of a green stalk of corn.

Now the shrill corn-pipes, echoing loud to arms, To rank and file reduce the straggling swarms. Ticket.

CORN-ROCKET. n. f. [from corn and rocket.] A plant.

CORN-ROSE. n. f. A species of puppy.

CORN-SALLAD. n. f. [from corn and sallad.] An herb, whose top-leaves are a sallot of themselves. Mortimer.

CORNCHANDLER. n. f. [corn and chandler.] One that retails corn.

CORNCUTTER. n. f. [from corn and cut.] A man whose profession is to extirpate corns from the foot.

The nail was not loose, nor did seem to press into the flesh; for there had been a corn-cutter, who had cleared it. Wifeman.

I have known a corn-cutter, who, with a right education, would have been an excellent physician. Spectator.

CORNEL. } n. f. [cornus, Lat.]

CORNE'LIAN-TREE. } The cornel tree beareth the fruit commonly called the cornel or cornelian cherry, as well from the name of the tree, as the cornelian stone, the colour whereof it somewhat represents. The wood is very durable, and useful for wheel-work. Mortimer.

Take a service-tree, or a cornelian-tree, or an elder-tree, which we know have fruits of harsh and binding juice, and set them near a vine or fig-tree, and see whether the grapes or figs will not be the sweeter. Bacon.

A huntress issuing from the wood, Reclining on her cornel spear the flood. Dryden.
Mean time the goddess, in disdain, bestows The mast and acorn, brutal food! and shows The fruits of cornel, as they feast around. Pope.
On wildings and on drawberries they fed; Cornels and brambleberries gave the rest, And falling acorns furnish'd out a feast. Dryden.

CORNE'LIAN STONE. See CARNELIAN.

CORNEMUSE. n. f. [Fr.] A kind of rustic flute.

CORNEOUS. adj. [corneus, Lat.] Horny; of a substance resembling horn.

Such as have corneous or horny eyes, as lobsters, and crustaceous animals, are generally dimighted. Brown.

The various submarine shrubs are of a corneous or ligneous constitution, consisting chiefly of a fibrous matter. Woodward.

CORNER. n. f. [cornel, Welsh; cornier, French.]

1. An angle; a place enclosed by two walls or lines which would intersect each other, if drawn beyond the point where they meet.

2. A secret or remote place.

There's nothing I have done yet, o' my conscience,

Deserves a corner. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

It is better to dwell in a corner of a house-top, than with a brawling woman and in a wide house. Proverbs.

I am persuaded that none of these things are hidden from him; for this thing was not done in a corner. Acts.

All the inhabitants, in every corner of the island, have been absolutely reduced under his immediate subjection. Davies.

Those vices, that lurk in the secret corners of the soul. Addison.

3. The extremities; the utmost limit: thus every corner is the whole or every part.

Might I but through my prison, once a day, Behold this maid, all corners else o' th' court! Let liberty make use of. Shakespeare's Tempest.

I turn'd, and tried each corner of my bed, To find if sleep were there; but sleep was lost. Dryden.

CORNER-STONE. n. f. [corner and stone.]

The stone that unites the two walls at the corner; the principal stone.

See you yond' coin o' th' capital, yond' corner-stone? Shakespeare.

A mason was fixing a corner-stone. Howell.

CORNER-TEETH of a Horse, are the fore-teeth between the middling teeth and the tusks; two above and two below, on each side of the jaw, which shoot when the horse is four years and a half old. Farrier's Dict.

CORNERWISE. adv. [corner and wise.] Diagonally; with the corner in front.

CORNET. n. f. [cornette, Fr.]

1. A musical instrument blown with the mouth: used anciently in war, probably in the cavalry.

Israel played before the Lord on psalteries, and on timbrels, and on cornets. 2 Samuel.

Other wind instruments require a forcible breath; as trumpets, cornets, and hunters horns. Bacon's Natural History.

Cornets and trumpets cannot reach his ear;

Under an actor's nose, he's never near. Dryden.

2. A company or troop of horse; perhaps as many as had a cornet belonging to them. This sense is now disused.

These noblemen were appointed, with some cornets of horse and bands of foot, to put themselves beyond the hill where the rebels were encamped. Bacon.

Seventy great horses lay dead in the field, and one cornet was taken. Hayward.

They discerned a body of five cornets of horse very full, standing in very good order to receive them. Clarendon.

3. The officer that bears the standard of a troop.

4. CORNET of a Horse, is the lowest part of his pastern, that runs round the coffin, and is distinguished by the hair that joins and covers the upper part of the hoof. Farrier's Dict.

5. A scarf anciently worn by doctors. DiD.

6. A headdress. DiD.

7. CORNET of Paper, is described by Skinner to be a cap of paper, made by retailers for small wares.

CORNETTER. n. f. [from cornet.] A blower of the cornet.

So great was the rabble of trumpeters, cornetters, and other musicians, that even Claudius himself might have heard them. Hakewill.

CORNICHE. n. f. [corniche, French.] The highest projection of a wall or column.

The cornice of the Palazzo Farnese, which makes so beautiful an effect below, when viewed more nearly, will be found not to have its full measure. Dryden's Duquesne.

The walls were massy brais, the cornice high Blue metals crown'd, in colours of the sky. Pope's Odyssey.

CORNICE Ring. [In gunnery.] The next ring from the muzzle backwards. Chambers.

CORNICLE. n. f. [from cornu, Lat.] A little horn.

There will be found, on either side, two black filaments, or membranous fringes, which extend unto the long and shorter cornicle, upon protrusion. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CORNICULATE. adj. [from cornu, Lat.] A term in botany.

Corniculate plants are such as produce many distinct and horned pods; and corniculate flowers are such hollow flowers as have on their upper part a kind of spur, or little horn. Chambers.

CORNIFICK. adj. [from cornu and ficus, Lat.] Productive of horns; making horns. DiD.

CORNIGEROUS. adj. [corniger, Latin.] Horned; having horns.

Nature, in other cornigerous animals, hath placed the horns higher, and reclining, as in bucks. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CORNUCOPIA. n. f. [Lat.] The horn of plenty; a horn topped with fruits and flowers in the hands of a goddess.

To CORNU'TE. v. a. [cornutus, Lat.] To bestow horns; to cuckold.

CORNU'TED. adj. [cornutus, Latin.]

Grafted with horns; horned; cuckolded.

CORNU'TO. n. f. [from cornutus, Latin.] A man horned; a cuckold.

The peaking cornuto, her husband, dwelling in a continual larum of jealousy. Shakespeare.

CORNY. adj. [from cornu, horn, Lat.]

1. Strong or hard like horn; horny.

Up stood the corny reed,

Emball'd in her field. Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. [from corn.] Producing grain or corn.

Tell me why the ant,

'Midst summer's plenty, thinks of winter's want;

By constant journeys careful to prepare

Her stores, and bringing home the corny ear. Prior.

3. Containing corn.

They lodge in habitations not their own,

By their high crops and corny gizzards known. Dryden.

COROLLARY. n. f. [corollarium, Latin; from corolla; fnis coronat opus: corollair, Fr.]

1. The conclusion: a corollary seems to be a conclusion, whether following from the premises necessarily or not.

Now since we have considered the malignity of this sin of detraction, it is but a natural corollary, that we enforce our vigilance against it. Government of the Tongue.

As a corollary to this preface, in which I have done justice to others, I owe somewhat to myself. Dryden's Fables, Preface.

2. Surplus.

Bring a corollary,

Rather than want. Shakespeare's Tempest.

CORONA. n. f. [Latin.] A large flat member of the cornice, so called because it crowns the entablature and the whole order. It is called by workmen the drip. Chambers.

In a cornice the gola or cymatium of the corona, the coping, the modillions or dentelli, make a noble throw by their graceful projections.

Spenser.

CORONAL. n. f. [corona, Latin.] A crown; a garland.

Crown ye god Bacchus with a coronal,
And Hymen also crown with wreaths of vine.

Spenser.

CORONAL. adj. Belonging to the top of the head.

A man of about forty-five years of age came to me, with a round tubercle between the sagittal and coronal future.

Wise man.

CORONARY. adj. [coronarius, Lat.]

1. Relating to a crown; seated on the top of the head like a crown.

The basiliak of older times was a proper kind of serpent, not above three palms long, as some account; and differenced from other serpents by advancing his head, and some white marks, or coronary spots upon the crown.

Brown.

2. It is applied in anatomy to arteries, which are fancied to encompass the heart in the manner of a garland.

The substance of the heart itself is most certainly made and nourished by the blood, which is conveyed to it by the coronary arteries.

Hentley.

CORONATION. n. f. [from corona, Lat.]

1. The act or solemnity of crowning a king.

Fortune smiling at her work therein, that a scaffold of execution should grow a scaffold of coronation.

Sidney.

Willingly I came to Denmark,

To shew my duty in your coronation.

Shakespeare.

A cough, fit, which I caught with ringing in the king's ears upon his coronation day.

Shakespeare.

Now empress fame had publish'd the renown
Of Sh—'s coronation through the town.

Dryden.

2. The pomp or assembly present at a coronation.

In pensive thought recal the fancied scene,
See coronations rise on ev'ry green.

Pope.

CORONER. n. f. [from corona.] An officer whose duty is to inquire, on the part of the king, how any violent death was occasioned; for which purpose a jury is impanelled.

Go thou and seek the coroner, and let him fit my uncle; for he's in the third degree of drink;
he's drowned.

Shakespeare.

CORONET. n. f. [coronetta, Ital. the diminutive of corona, a crown.]

1. An inferior crown worn by the nobility. The coronet of a duke is adorned with strawberry leaves; that of a marquis has leaves with pearls interposed; that of an earl raises the pearls above the leaves; that of a viscount is surrounded with only pearls; that of a baron has only four pearls.

In his livery

Walk'd crowns and coronets; realms and islands were

As plates dropt from his pocket.

Shakespeare.

All the rest are countesses.

— Their coronets say so.

Shakespeare.

Nor could our nobles hope their bold attempt,
Who ruin'd crowns, would coronets exempt.

Dryden.

Peers and dukes, and all their sweeping trains,
And garters, stars, and coronets appear.

Pope.

2. An ornamental headdress, in poetical language.

The rest was drawn into a coronet of gold, richly set with pearl.

Sidney.

Under a coronet his flowing hair,

In curls, on either cheek play'd.

Milton.

CORPORAL. n. f. [corrupted from caporal, Fr.] The lowest officer of the infantry, whose office is to place and remove the sentinels.

The cruel corp'ral whisper'd in my ear,
Five pounds, if rightly tip'd, would set me clear.

Gay.

CORPORAL of a Ship. An officer that hath the charge of setting the watches and sentinels, and relieving them; who sees that all the soldiers and sailors keep their arms neat and clean, and teaches them how to use them. He has a mate under him.

Harris.

CORPORAL. adj. [corporel, Fr. corpus, Latin.]

1. Relating to the body; belonging to the body.

To relief of lazars and weak age,
Of indigent faint souls past corporal toil,
A hundred alms houses right well supplied.

Shakespeare.

Render to me some corporal sign about me,
More evident than this.

Shakespeare.

That God hath been otherwise seen, with corporal eyes, exceedeth the small proportion of my understanding.

Raleigh.

Beasts enjoy greater sensual pleasures, and feel fewer corporal pains; and are utter strangers to all those anxious and tormenting thoughts which perpetually haunt and disquiet mankind.

Atterbury.

2. Material; not spiritual. In the present language, when body is used philosophically in opposition to spirit, the word corporeal is used, as, a corporeal being; but otherwise corporal. Corporeal is, having a body; corporal, relating to the body. This distinction seems not ancient.

Whither are they vanish'd?

Into the air; and what seem'd corporal

Melted, as breath, into the wind.

Shakespeare.

And from these corporal nutriments, perhaps,
Your bodies may at last turn all to spirit.

Milton.

CORPORALITY. n. f. [from corporal.] The quality of being imbodyed.

If this light be not spiritual, yet it approacheth nearest unto spirituality; and if it have any corporality, then, of all others, the most subtle and pure.

Raleigh's History.

CORPORALLY. adv. [from corporal.] Bodily.

The sun is corporally conjoined with basiliscus.

Brown.

CORPORATE. adj. [from corpus, Lat.]

1. United in a body or community; enabled to act in legal processes as an individual.

Breaking forth like a sudden tempest, he over-run all Munster and Connaught, desolating and utterly subverting all corporate towns that were not strongly walled.

Spenser on Ireland.

The nobles of Athens being not at this time a corporate assembly, therefore the resentment of the commons was usually turned against particular persons.

Swift.

2. General; united.

They answer in a joint and corporate voice,

That now they are at fall.

Shakespeare.

CORPORATENESS. n. f. [from corporate.] The state of a body corporate; a community.

Diſt.

CORPORATION. n. f. [from corpus, Lat.]

A body politick, authorized by the king's charter to have a common seal, one head officer or more, and members, able, by their common consent, to grant or receive, in law, any thing within the compass of their charter: even as one man may do by law all things, that by law he is not forbidden; and bindeth the successors, as a single man binds his executor or heir.

Cowell.

Of angels we are not to consider only what they are, and do, in regard to their own being; but that also which concerneth them, as they are linked into a kind of corporation amongst themselves, and of society with men.

Hooker.

Of this we find some four-steps in our law,
Which doth her root from God and nature take;

Ten thousand men the doth together draw,
And of them all one corporation make.

Davies.

CORPORATURE. n. f. [from corpus, Lat.] The state of being imbodyed.

Diſt.

CORPOREAL. adj. [corporeus, Lat.]

1. Having a body; material; not spiritual. See CORPORAL.

The swiftness of those circles attribute,
Though numberless, to his omnipotence,
That in corporeal substances could add Speed almost spiritual.

Milton's Par. Lost.

Having surveyed the image of God in the soul, we are not to omit those characters that God imprinted upon the body, as much as a spiritual substance could be pictured upon a corporeal.

South's Sermons.

God being supposed to be a pure spirit, cannot be the object of any corporeal sense.

Tillotson.

The course is finish'd which thy fates decreed,
And thou from thy corporeal prison freed.

Dryden.

Fix thy corporeal and internal eye

On the young gnat, or new engender'd fly.

Prior.

2. It is used by Swift inaccurately for corporal.

I am not in a condition to make a true step even on Ainsbury Downs; and I declare, that a corporeal false step is worse than a political one.

Swift.

CORPOREITY. n. f. [from corporeus, Lat.]

Materiality; the quality of being imbodyed; the state of having a body; bodiliness.

Since philosophy affirmeth, that we are middle substances between the soul and the body, they must admit of some corporeity, which supposeth weight or gravity.

Brown.

It is the saying of divine Plato, that man is nature's horizon, dividing betwixt the upper hemisphere of immaterial intellects, and this lower of corporeity.

Glauville's Serpiss.

The one attributed corporeity to God, and the other shape and figure.

Stillingfleet.

CORPORIFICATION. n. f. [from corporeify.] The act of giving body or palpability.

TO CORPOREIFY. v. a. [from corpus, Lat.]

To imbody; to insipilate into body.

Not used.

A certain spirituous substance, extracted out of it, is mistaken for the spirit of the world corrupted.

Boyle.

CORPS. } n. f. [corps, Fr. corpus, Lat.]

CORPSE. }

1. A body.

That lewd ribald

Laid first his filthy hands on virgin cleane,
To spoil her dainty corse, so fair and shene,
Of chastity and honour virginal.

Spenser.

2. A body, in contempt.

Though plentiful, all too little seems
To stuff this man, this vast unhide-bound corpse.

Milton.

He looks as man was made, with face erect,
That seems his little corse, and seems sham'd
He's not all spirit.

Dryden.

3. A carcase; a dead body; a corse.

Not a friend

Greet my poor corse, where my bones shall be thrown.

Shakespeare.

There was the murder'd corps in covert laid,
And violent death in thousand shapes display'd.

Dryden's Fables.

See where the corps of thy dead son approaches.

Addison.

The corps was laid out upon the floor by the emperor's command: he then bid every one light his flambeau, and stand about the dead body.

Addison's Guardian.

4. The body, in opposition to the soul.

Cold numbness straight betwixt

Her corps of sense, and th' air her soul receives.

Denham.

5. A body of forces.

CORPULENCE. } n. f. [corpulentia, Lat.]

CORPULENCY. } n. f. [corpulentia, Lat.]

1. Bulkiness of body; fleshiness; fulness of flesh.

To what a cumbersome unworldliness,
And burdensome corpulence, my love had grown.

Dante.

It is but one species of corpulency; for there may be bulk without fat, from the great quantity of muscular flesh, the case of robust people.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. Spiffitude; grossness of matter.

The mucous flesh serves for the vibration of the tail; the heaviness and corpulency of the water requiring a great force to divide it.

Ray.

CORPULENT. adj. [corpulentus, Latin.]

Fleshy; bulky; having great bodily bulk.

We say it is a fleshy stile, when there is much periphrases, and circuit of words; and when,
with more than enough, it grows fat and corpulent.

Excess of nourishment is hurtful; for it mak-eth the child corpulent, and growing in breadth rather than in height.

Bacon.

CORPUSCLE. n. f. [corpusculum, Lat.]

A small body; a particle of matter; an atom; a little fragment.

It will add much to our satisfaction, if those corpuscles can be discovered with microscopes.

Newton.

Who knows what are the figures of the little corpuscles that compose and distinguish different bodies?

Hutton's Logic.

CORPUSCULAR. } adj. [from cor-

CORPUSCULARIAN. } adj. [pusculum, Latin.]

Relating to bodies; comprising bodies.

It is the distinguishing epithet of that philosophy, which attempts the rational solution of all physical appearances by the action of one body upon another.

As to natural philosophy, I do not expect to see any principles proposed, more comprehensive and intelligible than the corpuscularian or mechanical.

Boyle.

This may be said, that the modern corpuscu-larian talk, in most things, more intelligibly than the periphrastics.

Bentley.

The mechanical or corpuscular philosophy, though peradventure the eldest, as well as the best in the world, had lain dead for many ages in contempt and oblivion.

Bentley.

CORRACLE. See CORRICLE.

TO CORRARE. v. a. [corrado, Lat.] To rub off; to wear away by frequent rubbing; to scrape together.

CORRADIATION. n. f. [cor and radius, Latin.] A conjunction of rays in one point.

The impression of colour worketh not but by a cone of direct beams, or right lines, whereof the basis is in the object, and the vertical point in the eye; so as there is a corradation, and conjunction of beams.

Bacon's Nat. Hist.

TO CORRECT. v. a. [corrigo, correctum, Latin.]

1. To punish; to chastise; to discipline.

Sad accidents, and a state of affliction, is a school of virtue; it corrects levity, and interrupts
the confidence of sinning.

Taylor.

After he has once been corrected for a lye, you must be sure never after to pardon it in him.

Locke on Education.

Children being to be restrained by the parents only in vicious things, a look or nod only ought to correct them when they do amiss.

Locke.

2. To amend; to take away faults in writings, life, or things.

This is a defect in the first make of some men's minds, which can scarce ever be corrected afterwards, either by learning or age.

Burnet.

Correcting Nature, from what actually she is in individuals, to what she ought to be, and what she was created.

Dryden.

I writ, because it amused me; I corrected, because it was as pleasant to me to correct as to write.

Pope's Preface.

The mind may cool, and be at leisure to attend to its domestick concern: to consider what habit wants to be corrected, and what inclination to be subdued.

Rogers.

3. To obviate the qualities of one ingredient by another, or by any method of preparation.

O happy mixture! wherein things contrary do so quietly and correct the one the danger of the other's excess, that neither boldness can make us presume, as long as we are kept under with the sense of our own wretchedness; nor, while we trust in the mercy of God through Christ Jesus, fear be able to tyrannize over us.

Hooker.

As, in habitual gout or stone,
The only thing that can be done,
Is to correct your drink and diet,
And keep the inward fire in quiet.

Prior.

In cases of acidity, water is the proper drink:
its quality of relaxing may be corrected by boiling it with some animal substances; as ivory or hartshorn.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

4. To remark faults.

CORRECT. adj. [correctus, Latin.] Revised or finished with exactness; free from faults.

What verse can do, he has perform'd in this,
Which he presumes the most correct of his.

Dryden.

Always use the most correct editions: various readings will be only troublesome where the sense is complete.

Fulton.

CORRECTION. n. f. [from correct.]

1. Punishment; discipline; chastisement; penalty.

Wilt thou, pupil like,
Take thy correction mildly, kiss the rod? Shakspeare.

An offensive wife,
That hath enrag'd him on to offer strokes,
As he is striking, holds his infant up,
And hangs resolv'd correction in the arm
That was uprear'd to execution.

Shakspeare.

We are all but children here under the great master of the family; and he is pleased, by hopes and fears, by mercies and corrections, to instruct us in virtue.

Watts.

One fault was too great lenity to her servants, to whom she gave good counsel, but too gentle correction.

Arbuthnot.

2. Alteration to a better state; the act of taking away faults; amendment.

Another poet, in another age, may take the same liberty with my writings; if, at least, they live long enough to deserve correction.

Dryden.

3. That which is substituted in the place of any thing wrong.

Corrections or improvements should be adjoined, by way of note or commentary, in their proper places.

Watts.

4. Reprehension; animadversion.

They proceed with judgment and ingenuity, establishing their assertions not only with great solidity, but submitting them also unto the correction of future discovery.

Brown.

5. Abatement of noxious qualities, by the addition of something contrary.

To make ambitious, whole some, do not take
A dram of country's dulness; do not add Corrections, but as chymists purge the bad.

Dante.

CORRECTIONER. n. f. [from correct.]

One that has been in the house of correction; a jailbird. This seems to be the meaning in Shakspeare.

I will have you soundly swinged for this, you blue-bottle rogue! you filthy famished correc-tioner.

Shakspeare's Henry IV.

CORRECTIVE. adj. [from correct.] Having the power to alter or obviate any bad qualities.

Mulberries are pectoral, corrective of bilious alkali.

Arbuthnot.

CORRECTIVE. n. f.

1. That which has the power of altering or obviating any thing amiss.

The hair, wool, feathers, and scales, which all animals of prey do swallow, are a seasonable and necessary corrective, to prevent their greediness from filling themselves with too succulent a food.

Ray on the Creation.

Humanly speaking, and according to the method of the world, and the little correctives supplied by art and discipline, it seldom fails but an ill principle has its course, and nature makes good its blow.

Smith's Sermons.

2. Limitation; restriction.

There seems to be such an instance in the regiment which the human soul exerciseth in relation to the body, that, with certain correctives and exceptions, may give some kind of explanation or adumbration thereof.

Hale.

CORRECTLY. adv. [from correct.] Accurately; exactly; without faults.

There are ladies, without knowing what tenses and participles, adverbs and prepositions are, speak as properly and as correctly as most gentlemen who have been bred up in the ordinary methods of grammar schools.

Latta.

Such lays as neither ebb nor flow,
Correctly cold, and regularly low.

Pope.

CORRECTNESS. n. f. [from correct.] Accuracy; exactness; freedom from faults.

Too much labour often takes away the spirit,
by adding to the polishing; so that there remains nothing but a dull correctness, a piece without any considerable faults, but with few beauties.

Dryden's Desires.

The softness of the flesh, the delicacy of the shape, air, and posture, and the correctness of design, in this statue, are inexpressible.

Addison.

Late, very late, correctness grew our care,
When the tir'd nation breath'd from civil war.

Pope.

These pieces have never before been printed from the true copies, or with any tolerable degree of correctness.

Swift.

CORRECTOR. n. f. [from correct.]

1. He that amends, or alters, by punishment or animadversion.

How many does zeal urge rather to do justice on some sin, than to forbear all sin! How many rather to be correctors than practitioners of religion.

Spratt's Sermons.

With all his faults, he sets up to be an universal reformer and corrector of abuses, and a remover of grievances.

Swift.

2. He that revises any thing to free it from faults: as the corrector of the press, that amends the errors committed in printing.

I remember a person, who, by his style and literature, seems to have been the corrector of a budge press in Little Britain, proceeding gradually to an author.

Swift.

3. In medicine.

Such an ingredient in a composition, as guards against or abates the force of another; as the trivial faults prevent the grievous vellications of resinous purges, by dividing their particles, and preventing their adhesion to the intestinal membranes; and as spices and carminative feeds assist the operation of some catharticks, by dissipating wind. In making a medicine, such a thing is called a corrector, which destroys or diminishes a quality that could not otherwise be dispensed with; thus turpentine is a corrector of quicksilver, by destroying its fluidity, and making it capable of mixture.

Quincy.

To CORRELATE. v. n. [from con and relatus, Lat.] To have a reciprocal relation, as father and son.

CORRELATE. n. f. One that stands in the opposite relation.

It is one thing for a father to cease to be a father, by casting off his son; and another for him to cease to be so, by the death of his son: in this the relation is at an end, for want of a correlate.

South.

CORRELATIVE. adj. [con and relativus, Latin.] Having a reciprocal relation, so that the existence of one in a particular state depends upon the existence of another.

Father and son, husband and wife, and such other correlative terms, seem nearly to belong one to another.

South.

Giving is a relative action, and so requires a correlative to answer it: giving, on one part, transfers no property, unless there be an accepting on the other.

South.

CORRELATIVENESS. n. f. [from correlative.] The state of being correlative.

CORREPTION. n. f. [corripio, corruptum, Latin.] Objection; chiding; reprehension; reproof.

If we must be talking of other people's faults, let it not be to defame, but to amend them, by converting our detraction into admonition and fraternal correction.

Government of the Tongue.

To CORRESPOND. v. n. [con and respondeo, Latin.]

1. To suit; to answer; to be proportionate; to be adequate to; to be adapted to; to fit.

The days, if one be compared with another successively throughout the year, are found not to be equal, and will not justly correspond with any artificial or mechanical equal measures of time.

Holder on Time.

Words being but empty sounds, any farther than they are signs of our ideas, we cannot but assent to them, as they correspond to those ideas we have, but no farther than that.

Locke.

2. To keep up commerce with another by alternate letters.

CORRESPONDENCE. n. f. [from cor- CORRESPONDENCY. n. f. [respondi.]

1. Relation; reciprocal adaptation of one thing to another.

Between the law of their heavenly operations, and the actions of men in this our state of mortality, such correspondence there is as maketh it expedient to know in some sort the one, for the other's more perfect direction.

Hooker.

Whatever we fancy, things keep their course; and their habitudes, correspondencies, and relations, keep the same to one another.

Locke.

2. Intercourse; reciprocal intelligence.

I had discovered those unlawful correspondencies they had used, and engagements they had made to embroil my kingdoms.

King Charles.

Sure the villains hold a correspondence With the enemy, and thus they would betray us.

Denham.

It happens very oddly, that the pope and I should have the same thought much about the same time: my enemies will be apt to say, that we hold a correspondence together, and set by concert in this matter.

Addison.

3. Friendship; interchange of offices or civilities.

Let such military persons be assured, and well reputed of, rather than factious and popular; holding also good correspondence with the other great men in the state.

Bacon.

CORRESPONDENT. adj. [from correspond.] Suitable; adapted; agreeable; answerable.

What good or evil is there under the sun, what action correspondent or repugnant unto the law which God hath imposed upon his creatures, but in or upon it God doth work, according to the law which himself hath eternally purposed to keep.

Hooker.

And as five zones th' etherial regions hind,
Five correspondent are to earth assign'd.

Dryden.

CORRESPONDENT. n. f. One with whom intelligence or commerce is kept up by mutual messages or letters.

He was pleased to command me to send to him, and receive from him all his letters from and to all his correspondents at home and abroad.

Denham's Dedication.

CORRESPONSIVE. adj. [from correspond.] Answerable; adapted to any thing.

Priam's six gates i' th' city, with massy staples,

And corresponsive and fulfilling bolts
Spere up the sons of Troy.

Shakespeare.

CORRIDOR. n. f. [French.]

1. [In fortification.] The covert way lying round the whole compass of the fortifications of a place.

2. [In architecture.] A gallery or long aisle round about a building, leading to several chambers at a distance from each other.

Harris.

There is something very noble in the amphitheatre, though the high wall and corridors that went round it are almost entirely ruined.

Addison on Italy.

CORRIGIBLE. adj. [from corrigo, Latin.]

1. That may be altered or amended.
2. That is a proper object of punishment; punishable.

He was taken up very short, and adjudged corrigible for such presumptuous language.

Howell.

3. Corrective; having the power to correct. Not proper, nor used.

Our bodies are our gardens, to the which our wills are gardeners: so that, if we will either have it steril with idleness, or manured with industry, the power and corrigible authority of this lies in our will.

Shakespeare's Othello.

CORRIVAL. n. f. [con and rival.] Rival; competitor.

They had governours commonly out of the two families of the Geraldines and Butlers, both adversaries and corrivals one against the other.

Spenser on Ireland.

CORROSION. n. f. [corrodo, Latin.] The power of eating or wearing away by degrees.

Corrosion is a particular species of dissolution of bodies, either by an acid or a saline menstruum. It is almost wholly designed for the resolution of bodies most strongly compacted, as bones and metals: so that the menstrua here employed have a considerable momentum or force. These liquors, whether acid or urinous, are nothing but salts dissolved in a little phlegm; therefore these bring solid, and consequently containing a considerable quantity of matter, do both attract one another more, and are also more attracted by the particles of the body to be dissolved: so when the more solid bodies are put into saline menstrua, the attraction is stronger than in other solutions; and the motion, which is always proportional to the attraction, is more violent: so that we may easily conceive, when the motion is in such a manner increased, it should drive the salts into the pores of the bodies, and open and loosen their cohesion, though ever so firm. Quincy.

A kind of poison worketh either by corrosion, or by a secret malignity and enmity to nature.

Bacon's Natural History.

That corrosion and dissolution of bodies, even the most solid and durable, which is vulgarly ascribed to the air, is caused merely by the action of water upon them; the air being so far from injuring and preying upon the bodies it environs, that it contributes to their security and preservation. Woodward.

tion between gentlemen and cottagers. Bacon.

COTTIER. n. f. [from cot.] One who inhabits a cot. Did.

COTTON. n. f. [named, according to Skinner, from the down that adheres to the mala cotonea, or quince, called by the Italians cotogni; whence cotton, Ital. cotton, French.]

1. The down of the cotton-tree.

The pin ought to be as thick as a rowlingpin, and covered with cotton, that its hardness may not be offensive. Wijeman.

2. Cloth made of cotton.

COTTON. n. f. A plant.

The species are, 1. Shrubby cotton. 2. The most excellent American cotton, with a greenish seed. 3. Annual shrubby cotton, of the island of Providence. 4. The tree cotton. 5. Tree cotton, with a yellow flower. The first sort is cultivated plentifully in Candia, Lemnos, Cyprus, Malta, Sicily, and at Naples; as also between Jerusalem and Damascus, from whence the cotton is brought annually into these northern parts of Europe. The cotton is the wool which incloses or wraps up the seeds, and is contained in a kind of brown husk, or seed-vessel, growing upon this shrub. It is from this sort that the vast quantities of cotton are taken, which furnish our parts of the world. The second and third sorts are annual: these are cultivated in the West Indies in great plenty. But the fourth and fifth sorts grow in Egypt: these abide many years, and often arrive to be trees of great magnitude. Miller.

To COTTON. v. n.

1. To rise with a knap.

2. To cement; to unite with: a cant word.

A quarrel will end in one of you being turned off, in which case it will not be easy to cotton with another. Swift.

The women took and spread a covering over the well's mouth.
Sam.

Bring some covering for this naked soul,
Whom I'll intreat to lead me.
Shakspeare.

Through her flesh methinks is seen
The brighter soul that dwells within;
Our eyes the subtle covering pass,
And see the lily through its glass.
Cowley.

Then from the floor he rais'd a royal bed,
With coverings of Sidonian purple spread.
Dryd.

Sometimes providence casts things so, that truth and interest lie the same way; and when it is wrapt up in this covering, men can be content to follow it.
South.

1. The form of the face; the system of the features.

2. Air; look.

A made countenance about her mouth, between simpering and frowning; her head, bowed somewhat down, seemed to languish with over-moon idleness.

Sidney.

Well, Suffolk, yet thou shalt not see me blush, Nor change my countenance for this arrest:

A heart unquitted is not easily daunted.

So spake our fire, and by his countenance

seem'd

Entering on studious thoughts abstract.

To whom, with countenance calm, and soul

sedate,

Thus tutus.

Dryden's Aeneid.

3. Calmness of look; composure of face.

She smil'd severe; nor with a troubled look, Or trembling hand, the funeral present took;

Ev'n kept her countenance, when the lid remov'd

Disclos'd the heart unfortunately lov'd.

The two great maxims of any great man at court are, always to keep his countenance, and never to keep his word.

Swift.

4. Confidence of mien; aspect of assurance: it is commonly used in these phrases, in countenance, and out of countenance.

The night beginning to persuade some retiring place, the gentlewoman, even out of countenance before she began her speech, invited me to lodge that night with her father.

Sidney.

We will not make your countenance to fall by the answer ye shall receive.

Bacon.

Then best friends were out of countenance, because they found that the imputations, which their enemies had laid upon them, were well grounded.

Clarendon.

Your examples will meet it at every turn, and put it out of countenance in every place; even in private corners it will soon lose confidence.

Spratt's Sermons.

If the outward profession of religion and virtue were once in practice and countenance at court, a good treatment of the clergy would be the necessary consequence.

Swift.

If those preachers would look about, they would find one part of their congregation out of countenance, and the other asleep.

Swift.

It is a kind of ill manners to offer objections to a fine woman, and a man would be out of countenance that should gaudy superiority in such a contest: a coquette logician may be rallied, but not contradicted.

Addison's Freeholder.

It puts the learned in countenance, and gives them a place among the fashionable part of mankind.

Addison's Freeholder.

5. Kindness or ill-will, as it appears upon the face.

Yet the stout fairy, 'mongst the middlest crowd, Thought all their glory vain in knightly view,

And that great princes too, exceeding proud,

That to strange knight no better countenance

allow'd.

Spenser.

6. Patronage; appearance of favour; appearance on any side; support.

The church of Christ, which held that profession which had not the publick allowance and countenance of authority, could not use the exercise of the christian religion but in private.

Hooker.

His majesty maintain'd an army here, to give strength and countenance to the civil magistrate.

Daniel on Ireland.

Now then we'll use

His countenance for the battle; which being done,

Let her who would be rid of him devise

His speedy taking off.

Shakespeare's L. Lear.

This is the magistrate's peculiar province, to give countenance to piety and virtue, and to rebuke vice and profaneness.

Atterbury.

7. Superficial appearance; show; resemblance.

The election being done, he made countenance of great discontent thereto.

1. That is made in imitation of another, with intent to pass for the original; forged; fictitious.

I learn

Now of my own experience, not by talk,
How counterfeit a coin they are, who friends
Bear in their supercription; in prosperous days
They (warm, but in adverse withdraw their head. Milton.

General observations drawn from particulars, are the jewels of knowledge, comprehending great store in a little room; but they are therefore to be made with the greater care and caution, lest, if we take counterfeit for true, our shame be the greater, when our stock comes to a severe scrutiny. Locke.

2. Deceitful; hypocritical.

True friends appear less mov'd than counterfeit. Rejoicecommon.

- CO'UNTERFEIT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. One who personates another; an impostor.

I am no counterfeit; to die is to be a counterfeit; for he is but the counterfeit of a man, who hath not the life of a man. Shakspeare.

This priest, being utterly unacquainted with the true person, according to whose pattern he should shape his counterfeit, yet could think it possible for him to instruct his player, either in gesture or fashions, or in fit answers to questions, to come near the resemblance. Bacon.

But trust me, child, I'm much inclin'd to fear
Some counterfeit in this your Jupiter. Addison.

2. Something made in imitation of another, intended to pass for that which it resembles; a forgery.

My father was I know not where,
When I was snapt. Some coiner with his tools,
Made me a counterfeit; yet my mother seem'd
The Dan of that time. Shakspeare.

There would be no counterfeits but for the sake of something real; though pretenses seem to be what they really are not, yet they pretend to be something that really is. Tilletson.

- CO'UNTERFEITER. n. f. [from counterfeit.] A forger; one who contrives copies to pass for originals.

Asbushmore.

COUNTERPRESSURE. n. f. [counter and pressure.] Opposite force; power acting in contrary directions.

Does it not all mechanick heads confound,
That troops of atoms from all parts around,
Of equal number, and of equal force,
Should to this single point direct their course;
That to the counterpressure ev'ry way,
Of equal vigour, might their motions stay,
And by a steady poise the whole in quiet lay.

Blackmore.

COUNTERPROJECT. n. f. [counter and project.] Correspondent part of a scheme.

A clear reason why they never sent any forces to Spain, and why the obligation not to enter into a treaty of peace with France, until that entire monarchy was yielded as a preliminary, was struck out of the counterproject by the Dutch.

Swift.

And give not thus the countertime to fate.

Dryden.

COUNTERTURN. n. f. [counter and turn.]

The catastrophe, called by the Romans status, the height and full growth of the play, we may call properly the counterturn, which destroys that expectation, embroils the action in new difficulties, and leaves you far distant from that hope in which it found you.

Dryden.

To COUNTERVAIL. v. a. [contra and valet, Lat.] To be equivalent to; to have equal force or value; to act against with equal power.

In some men there may be found such qualities as are able to countervail those exceptions which might be taken against them, and such men's authority is not likely to be shaken off.

Hobbes.

And therewithal he fiercely at him flew,

And with important outrage him assail'd;

Who, soon prepar'd to field, his sword forth drew,

And him with equal valour countervail'd.

Fairy Q.

The outward streams, which descend, must be of so much force as to countervail all that weight whereby the ascending side does exceed the other.

Wilkins' Dædalus.

We are to compute, that, upon balancing the account, the profit at last will hardly countervail the inconveniences that go along with it.

L'Estrange.

COUNTERVAIL. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Equal weight; power or value sufficient to obviate any effect or objection.

2. That which has equal weight or value with something else.

Surely, the present pleasure of a sinful act is a poor countervail for the bitterness of the review, which begins where the action ends, and lasts for ever.

South's Sermons.

COUNTERVIEW. n. f. [counter and view.]

1. Opposition; a posture in which two persons front each other.

I have drawn some lines of Linger's character, on purpose to place it in counterview or contrast with that of the other company.

Swift.

To COUNTERWORK. v. a. [counter and work.] To counteract; to hinder any effect by contrary operations.

But heav'n's great view is one, and that the whole:

That countersworks each folly and caprice;

That disappoints th' effect of ev'ry vice.

Pope.

COUNTRESS. n. f. [comitissa, Lat. comtesse, Fr.] The lady of an earl or count.

I take it, she that carries up the train,

Is that old noble lady, the duchess of Norfolk.

—It is, and all the rest are countresses.

Shakspeare.

It is the peculiar happiness of the countress of Abingdon to have been so truly loved by you while she was living, and so gratefully honoured after she was dead.

Dryden.

CO'UNTING-HOUSE. n. f. [count and house.]

The room appropriated by traders to their books and accounts.

Men in trade seldom think of laying out money upon land, till their profit has brought them in more than their trade can well employ; and their idle bags cumbering their counting-houses, put them upon emptying them.

Locks.

CO'UNTLESS. adj. [from count.] Innumerable; without number; not to be reckoned.

Ay, tea for tear, and loving kifs for kifs,

Thy brother Marcus tenders on thy lips:

O were the sum of these that I should pay

Countless and infinite, yet would I pay them.

Shakspeare.

But oh, her mind, that orcs which includes Legions of mischief, countless casualties
Of former curses.

Dumas.

By one countless sum of woes oppress'd,
Hoary with cares, and ignorant of rest,
We find the vital springs relax'd and worn;
Thus, thro' the round of age, to childhood we return.

Prior.

I see, I cried, his woes, a countless train;

I see his friends o'erwhelm'd beneath the main.

Pope's Odyssey.

COUNTRY. n. f. [contré, Fr. contrata, low Latin; supposed to be contracted from contrerata.]

1. A tract of land; a region, as distinguished from other regions.

They require to be examined concerning the descriptions of those countries of which they would be informed.

Spratt.

2. The parts of a region distant from cities or courts; rural parts.

Would I a house for happiness erect,
Nature alone should be the architect;
She'd build it more convenient than great,
And doubtless in the country chuse her seat.

Cowley.

I see them hurry from country to town, and then from the town back again into the country.

Speator.

3. The place which any man inhabits, or in which he at present resides.

Send out more horses, strike the country round,
Hang those that talk of fear.

Shakspeare.

We make a country man dumb, whom we will not allow to speak but by the rules of grammar. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

CO'UNTRYMAN. n. s. [from country and man.]

1. One born in the same country, or tract of ground. Locke.

See, who comes here?
My countryman; but yet I know him not. Shakspeare.
Homer, great bard! so fate ordain'd, arose;
And, bold as were his countrymen in fight,
Scatch'd their fair actions from degrading praise,
And set their battles in eternal light. Prior.

The British soldiers act with greater vigour under the conduct of one whom they do not consider only as their leader, but as their countryman. Addison on the War.

2. A rustic; one that inhabits the rural parts.

All that have business to the court, and all countrymen coming up to the city, leave their wives in the country. Graunt.

3. A farmer; a husbandman.

A countryman took a boar in his corn. L'Estrange.

CO'UNTY. n. s. [comté, Fr. comitatus, Latin.]

1. A shire; a circuit or portion of the realm, into which the whole land is divided, for the administration of justice.

Every county is governed by a yearly officer, called a sheriff, who puts in execution all the commands and judgments of the king's courts. Of these counties four are termed county-palatines, as that of Lancaster, Cheshire, Durham, and Ely. A county-palatine is a jurisdiction of so high a nature, that the chief governors of these, by special charter from the king, sent out all writs in their own name, and did all things touching justice as absolutely as the prince himself, only acknowledging him their superior and sovereign. But this power has, by a statute in Henry VIII. his time, been much abridged. There are likewise counties corporate, which are certain cities or ancient boroughs upon which our princes have thought good to bestow extraordinary liberties. Of these London is one, York another, the city of Chester a third, and Canterbury a fourth. And to these may be added many more; as the county of the town of Kingston upon Hull, the county of the town of Haverfordwest, and the county of Lichfield. County is, in another signification, used for the county-court. Cowell.

Discharge your powers unto their several counties, Shakspeare.

As we will ours.
He caught his death the last county sessions, where he would go to see justice done to a poor widow-woman, and her fatherless children. Addison's Spectator.

2. An earldom.

3. [comité.] A count; a lord. Obsolete.
The gallant, young, and noble gentleman,
The county Paris. Shakspeare.

He made Hugh Lupus county palatine of Chester, and gave that earldom to him and his heirs, to hold the same ita liberis ad gladium, sicut rex tenebat Angliam ad coronam. Davies.

COUPE'E. n. s. [French.] A motion in dancing, when one leg is a little bent and suspended from the ground, and with the other a motion is made forwards. Chambers.

COUPLE. n. s. [couple, French; copula, Latin.]

1. A chain or tie that holds dogs together.

I'll keep my stable-hand where
I lodge my wife; I'll go in couple with her,
Than when I feel and see no further trust her. Shakspeare.

It is in some sort with friends as it is with dogs in couple; they should be of the same size and humour. L'Estrange.

2. Two; a brace.

He was taken up by a couple of shepherds, and by them brought to life again. Sidney.
A schoolmaster, who shall teach my son and yours, I will provide you, though the three do cost me a couple of hundred pounds. Ascham.

A piece of crystal inclosed a couple of drops, which looked like water when they were shaken, though perhaps they are nothing but bubbles of air. Addison on Italy.

By adding one to one, we have the complex idea of a couple. Locke.

3. A male and his female.

So shall all the couple three,
Excellent in loving be. Shakspeare.
Oit' alas!

I lost a couple, that 'twixt heaven and earth Might thus have stood, begetting wonder, as You gracious couple do. Shakspeare.

I have read of a feigned commonwealth, where the married couple are permitted, before they contract, to see one another naked. Bacon.

He said: the careful couple join their tears,
And then invoke the gods with pious prayers. Dryden.

All succeeding generations of men are the progeny of one primitive couple. Bentley.

TO CO'UPLE. v. a. [copulo, Latin.]

1. To chain together.

Huntman, I charge thee, tender well my hounds;
And couple Clowder with the deep-mouth'd Brach. Shakspeare.

2. To join one to another.

What greater ills have the heavens in store,
To couple coming harms with sorrow past. Sidney.
And whoso'er we went, like Juno's swans,
Still we went coupled and inseparable. Shakspeare.

Put the raches into the loupes, and couple the tent together that it may be one. Exodus.

They behold your chaste conversation coupled with fear. Peter.

Their concernments were so coupled, that if nature had not, yet their religions would have made them brothers. South.

That man makes a mean figure in the eyes of reason, who is measuring syllables and coupling rhymes, when he should be mending his own soul, and securing his own immortality. Pope.

3. To marry; to wed; to join in wedlock.

I shall rejoice to see you so coupled, as may be fit both for your honour and your satisfaction. Sidney.

TO CO'UPLE. v. n. To join in embrace.

Waters in Africa being rare, divers sorts of beasts come from several parts to drink; and so being refreshed, fall to couple, and many times with several kinds. Bacon.

Thou, with thy lusty crew,
Cast wanton eyes on the daughters of men,
And coupled with them, and begot a race. Milt.

That great variety of brutes in Africa, is by reason of the meeting together of brutes of several species, at water, and the promiscuous couplings of males and females of several species. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

After this alliance,
Let tygers match with hinds, and wolves with sheep,

And every creature couple with his foe. Dryden.

COUPLE-BEGGAR. n. s. [couple and beg- gar.] One that makes it his business to marry beggars to each other.

No couple-beggar in the land
E'er join'd such numbers hand in hand. Swift.

CO'UPLET. n. s. [French.]

1. Two verses; a pair of rhymes.

Then would they cast away their pipes, and, holding hand in hand, dance by the only cadence of their voices, which they would use in fingering some short couplets, whereto the one half beginning, the other half should answer. Sidney.

Then at the last, an only couplet fraught
With some unmeaning thing they call a thought;
A needless Alexandrine ends the song,
That, like a wounded snake, drags its slow
length along. Pope.

In Pope I cannot read a line,
But with a sigh I with it mine;
When he can in one couplet fix
More sense than I can do in six,
It gives me such a jealous fit,
I cry, pox take him and his wit! Swift.

2. A pair, as of doves.

Amos, as patient as the female dove,
Ere that her golden couplets are disclos'd,
His silence will sit drooping. Shakspeare.

COURAGE. n. s. [courage, Fr. from cor, Lat.] Bravery; active fortitude; spirit of enterprise.

The king-becoming graces,
Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude,
I have no reath of them. Shakspeare.

Their discipline
Now mingled with their courage. Shakspeare.

Hope arms their courage; from their tow'rs
they throw

Their darts with double force, and drive the foe. Dryden.

Courage, that grows from constitution, very often forsakes a man when he has occasion for it; and when it is only a kind of instinct in the soul, it breaks out on all occasions, without judgment or discretion. That courage which arises from the sense of our duty, and from the fear of offending Him that made us, acts always in an uniform manner, and according to the dictates of right reason. Addison's Guardian.

Nothing but the want of common courage was the cause of their misfortunes. Swift.

COURAGEOUS. adj. [from courage.]

1. Brave; daring; bold; enterprising; adventurous; hardy; stout.

And he that is courageous among the mighty, shall see away naked in that day. Amos.

Let us imitate the courageous example of St. Paul, who chose then to magnify his office when ill men conspired to lessen it. Atterbury.

2. It is used ludicrously by Shakspeare for outrageous.

He is very courageous mad, about his throwing into the water. Shakspeare.

COURAGEOUSLY. adv. [from courageous.]

Bravely; stoutly; boldly.

The king the next day presented him battle upon the plain, the fields there being open and champaign; the earl courageously came down, and joined battle with him. Bacon.

COURAGEOUSNESS. n. s. [from courageous.]

Bravery; boldness; spirit; courage.

Then with a second course the tables load,
And with full chargers offer to the god.

Dryd.

You are not to wash your hands till after you have sent up your second course.

Swift.

So quick retires each flying course, you'd swear
Sancho's dread doctor and his wand were there.

Pope.

20. Regularity; settled rule.

21. Empty form.

Men talk as if they believed in God, but they live as if they thought there was none; their vows and promises are no more than words of course.

L'Estrange.

22. Of course. By consequence.

With a mind unprepossessed by doctors and commentators of any sect, whose reasonings, interpretation, and language, which I have been used to, will of course make all chime that way; and make another, and perhaps the genuine meaning of the author, seem harsh, strained, and uncouth to me.

Locke.

23. Of course. By settled rule.

Scuse is of course annex'd to wealth and power;

No muse is proof against a golden shower.

Then to his absent guest the king decreed
A pair of coursers, born of heav'nly breed;

Who from their nostrils breath'd ethereal fire,
Whom Circe stole from her celestial fire.

Dryd.

Th' impatient coursier pants in every vein,
And, pawing, seems to beat the distant plain;

Hills, vales, and floods appear already cross'd,
And, ere he starts, a thousand steps are lost.

Pope.

2. One who pursues the sport of coursing hares.

A lusk is a leathern thing, by which a falconer holds his hawk, or a coursier leads his greyhound.

Hanmer.

COURT. n. f. [cour, Fr. coert, Dutch; curtis, low Latin.]

1. The place where the prince resides; the palace.

Here do you keep a hundred knights and squires,

Men so disorderly, so debauch'd and bold,
That this our court, infected with their manners,
Shews like a riotous inn; epicurism and lust

Make it more like a tavern, or a brothel,
Than a grac'd palace.

Shakespeare.

It shall be an habitation of dragons, and a court for owls.

Shaksp.

His exactness, that every man should have his due, was such, that you would think he had never seen a court; the politeness with which this justice was administered, would convince you he never had lived out of one.

Pope.

A suppliant to your royal court I come.

Pope.

2. The hall or chamber where justice is administered.

Are you acquainted with the difference
(That holds this present question in the court?)
Shakespeare.

St. Paul being brought into the highest court in Athens, to give an account of the doctrine he had preached concerning Jesus and the resurrection, took occasion to imprint on those magistrates a future state.
Atterbury.

3. Open space before a house.

You must have, before you come to the front, three courts: a green court plain, with a wall about it; a second court of the same, but more garnished, with little turrets, or other embellishments, upon the wall; and a third court, to square with the front, not to be built but inclosed with a naked wall.
Bacon.

Suppose it were the king's bedchamber, yet the meanest man in the tragedy must come and dispatch his business, rather than in the lobby or court yard (which is fitter for him) for fear the stage should be cleared, and the scenes broken.
Dryden.

4. A small opening enclosed with houses, and paved with broad stones, distinguished from a street.

5. Persons who compose the retinue of a prince.

Their wisdom was so highly esteemed, that some of them were always employed to follow the courts of their kings, to advise them.
Temple.

6. Persons who are assembled for the administration of justice.

7. Any jurisdiction, military, civil, or ecclesiastical.

If any noise or soldier you perceive
Near to the wall, by some apparent sign
Let us have knowledge at the court of guard.
Shakespeare's Henry vi.

The archbishop
Of Canterbury, accompanied with other
Learned and reverend fathers of his order, Held a late court at Dunstable.
Shakespeare.
I have at last met with the proceedings of the court baron, held in that behalf.
Spectator.

8. The art of pleasing; the art of insinuation; civility; flattery.

Him the prince with gentle court did board.
Spenser.

Hast thou been never false? Did love ne'er bend

Thy fairer virtue to betray thy friend?
Flatter me, make thy court, and say it did;
Kings in a crowd would have their vices hid.
Dryd. Aureng.

Some sort of people, placing a great part of their happiness in strong drink, are always forward to make court to my young master, by offering that which they love best themselves.
Locke.

I have been considering why poets have such ill success in making their court, since they are allowed to be the greatest and best of all flatterers: the defect is, that they flatter only in print or in writings.
Swift to Gay.

9. It is often used in composition in most of its senses.

To COURT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To woo; to solicit a woman to marriage.

Follow a shadow, it flies you;
Seem to fly it, it will pursue:
So court a mistress, she denies you;
Let her alone, she will court you.
Ben Jonson.
Fie'd with her love, and with ambition led,
The neighbouring princes court her nuptial bed.
Dryden's Aureng.

Alas! Sempronius, wouldst thou risk of love
To Marcia, whilst her father's life's in danger?
Thou might'st as well court the pale trembling
vestal,
While she beholds the holy flame expiring.
Adams's Cato.

Fo'n now, when silent scorn is all they gain,
A thousand court you, though they court in vain.
Pope.

2. To solicit; to seek.

Their own ease and satisfaction would quickly teach children to court commendation, and avoid doing what they found condemned.
Locke.

3. To flatter; to endeavour to please.

COURT-CHAPLAIN. n. f. [court and chaplain.] One who attends the king to celebrate the holy offices.

The maids of honour have been fully convinced by a famous court-chaplain.
Swift.

COURT-DAY. n. f. [court and day.] Day on which justice is solemnly administered.

The judge took time to deliberate, and the next court-day he spoke.
Arbuthnot and Pope.

COURT-DRESSER. n. f. [court and dresser.] One that dresses the court, or persons of rank; a flatterer.

There are many ways of fallacy; such arts of giving colours, appearances, and resemblances, by this court-dresser, fancy.
Locke.

COURT-FAVOUR. n. f. Favours or benefits bestowed by princes.

We part with the blessings of both worlds for pleasures, court-favours, and commissions; and at last, when we have sold ourselves to our lusts, we grow sick of our bargain.
L'Estrange.

COURT-HAND. n. f. [court and hand.]

The hand or manner of writing used in records and judicial proceedings.

He can make obligations, and write court-hand.
Shakespeare.

COURT-LADY. n. f. [court and lady.] A lady conversant or employed in court.

The same study, long continued, is as intolerable to them, as the appearing long in the same clothes or fashion is to a court-lady.
Locke.

COURTEOUS. adj. [courtois, French.]

Elegant of manners; polite; well-bred;
full of acts of respect.

He hath deserved worthily of his country;
and his ascent is not by such easy degrees, as those who have been supple and courteous to the people.
Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

They are one while courteous, civil, and obliging; but, within a small time after, are supercilious, sharp, troublesome, fierce, and exceptious.
South.

COURTEOUSLY. adv. [from courteous.]

Respectfully; civilly; complaisantly.

He thought them to be gentlemen of much more worth than their habits betrayed, yet he let them courteously pass.
Wotton.

Whilst Christ was upon earth, he was not only easy of access, he did not only courteously receive all that addressed themselves to him, but also did not disdain himself to travel up and down the country.
Calamy's Sermons.

Aleinous, being prevailed upon by the glory of his name, entertained him courteously.
Broome.

COURTEOUSNESS. n. f. [from courteous.]
Civility; complaisance.

COURTESAN. } n. f. [cortisana, low

COURTEZAN. } Lat.] A woman of the town; a prostitute; a strumpet.

'Tis a brave night to cool a courtesan. Shaksp.
With them there are no fews, no dissolute houses, no courtesans, nor any thing of that kind; nay they wonder, with detestation, at you in Europe, which permit such things.
Bacon.

The Corinthian is a column lasciviously decked like a courtesan.
Wotton.

Charinus, the brother of Sappho, in love with Rhodope the courtesan, spent his whole estate upon her.
Addison.

COURTESY. n. f. [courtoisie, Fr. cortesia, Italian.]

1. Elegance of manners; civility; complaisance.

Sir, you are very welcome to our house:
It must appear in other ways than words,
Therefore I scant this breathing courtesy.
Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

Who have seen his estate, his hospitality, his courtesy to strangers.
Peacock.

He, who was compounded of all the elements of affability and courtesy towards all kind of people, brought himself to a habit of neglect, and even of rudeness, towards the queen.
Clarendon.

Courtesy is sooner found in lowly shades
With smoky rafters, than in tap'stry halls,
And courts of princes, whence it first was nam'd.
Milton.

So gentle of condition was he known,
That through the court his courtesy was blown.
Dryden's Fables.

2. An act of civility or respect.

You spurn'd me such a day; another time
You call'd me dog; and, for these courtesies,
I'll lend you thus much money.
Shakespeare.

Repose you there, while I to the hard house Return, and force their scantied courtesy. Shaksp.

When I was last at Exeter,
The mayor in courtesy shew'd me the castle.
Shakespeare's Richard III.

Sound all the lofty instruments of war,
And by that music let us all embrace;
For heav'n to earth some of us never shall
A second time do such a courtesy. Shakespeare.

Other states, assuredly, cannot be justly accused for not staying for the first blow; or for not accepting Polyphemus's courtesy, to be the last that shall be eaten up.
Bacon.

3. The reverence made by women.

Some country girl, scarce to a court'sy bred,
Would I much rather than Cornelia wed;
If, supercilious, haughty, proud, and vain,
She brought her father's triumphs in her train.
Dryden's Juvenal.

The poor creature was as full of courtesies as if I had been her godmother: the truth on't is,
I endeavoured to make her look something christian-like.
Congreve's Old Bachelor.

4. A tenure, not of right, but by the favour of others: as, to hold upon courtesy.

5. COURTESY of England. A tenure by which, if a man marry an inheritrix, that is, a woman seised of land, and getteth a child of her, that comes alive into the world, though both the child and his wife die forthwith, yet, if he were in possession, shall he keep the land during his life, and is called tonant per legem Anglie, or by the courtesy of England.
Cowell.

To COURTESY. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To perform an act of reverence: it is now only used of women.

Toby approaches, and courtesies there to me.
Shakespeare.

The petty traffickers,
That court'sy to them, do them reverence.
Shakespeare.

2. To make a reverence in the manner of ladies.

If I should meet her in my way,
We hardly court'sy to each other.
Priori.

COURTIER. n. f. [from court.]

1. One that frequents or attends the courts of princes.

He hath been a courtier, he swears.—

If any man doubts that, let him put me to my purgation. I have trod a measure; I have flattered a lady; I have been politick with my friend, smooth with mine enemy; I have undone three tailors; I have had four quarrels, and like to have fought one.
Shakespeare.

You are a flattering boy; now, I see you'll be a courtier. Shakespeare.

You know I am no courtier, nor versed in state-affairs. Bacon.

The principal figure in a picture, is like a king among his courtiers, who ought to dim the lustre of his attendants. Dryden.

2. One that courts or solicits the favour of another.

Made thee, all honour'd, honest Roman Brutus, With the arm'd reed, courtiers of beauteous freedom, To drench the capitol! Shakespeare.

There was not among all our princes a greater courtier of the people than Richard III.; not out of fear, but wisdom. Suckling.

CO'URTINE. See CURTAIN.

CO'URTLIKE. adj. [court and like.] Elegant; polite.

Our English tongue is, I will not say as sacred as the Hebrew, or as learned as the Greek, but as fluent as the Latin, as courteous as the Spanish, as courtlike as the French, and as amorous as the Italian. Caenden's Remains.

CO'URTLINESS. n. f. [from courtly.] Elegance of manners; grace of mien; complaisance; civility.

The slightest part that you excel in, is courtliness. Lord Digby to Sir Kenelm Digby.

CO'URTILING. n. f. [from court.] A courtier; a retainer to a court.

Courtling, I rather thou should'st utterly Dispraise my work, than praise it frostily. Ben Jonson.

CO'URTLY. adj. [from court.] Relating or retaining to the court; elegant; soft; flattering.

In our own time (excuse some courtly strains) No whiter page than Addison's remains. Pope.

CO'URTLY. adv. In the manner of courts; elegantly.

They can produce nothing so courtly writ, or which exprests so much the conversation of a gentleman, as Sir John Suckling. Dryden.

CO'URTSHIP. n. f. [from court.]

1. The act of soliciting favour.
He paid his courtship with the crowd,
As far as modest pride allow'd. Swift.
2. The solicitation of a woman to marriage.

Be merry, and employ your chiefest thoughts To courtship, and such fair objects of love,
As shall conveniently become you there. Shakspeare.
In tedious courtship we declare our pain,
And ere we kindness find, first meet disdain. Dryden.

Every man in the time of courtship, and in the first entrance of marriage, puts on a behaviour like my correspondent's holiday suit. Addison.

3. Civility; elegance of manners.

My courtship to an university,
My modesty I give to soldiers bare;
My patience to a gamester's share. Donne.

CO'USIN. n. f. [cousin, Fr. consanguineus, Latin.]

1. Any one collaterally related more remotely than a brother or sister.

Macheth unseam'd him.
Oh valiant cousin! worthy gentleman! Shakspeare.
Tybalt, my cousin! O my brother's child!
Unhappy fight! alas, the blood is spill'd
Of my dear kinsman. Shakspeare.

Thou art, great lord, my father's sister's son,
And cousin german to great Priam's seed. Shakspeare.

2. A title given by the king to a nobleman, particularly to those of the council.

COW. n. f. [in the plural anciently line, or keen, now commonly cows; cu, Sax.

See, Dutch.] The female of the bull; the horned animal with cloven feet, kept for her milk and calves.

We see that the horns of oxen and cows, for the most part, are larger than the bull's; which is caused by abundance of moisture, which in the horns of the bull faileth. Bacon.

After the fever is diminished, asses and goats milk may be necessary; yea, a diet of cows milk alone. Wiseman's Surgery.

Then, leaving in the fields his grazing cows,
He fought himself some hospitable house!
Good Creton entertain'd his godlike guest. Dryden's Fables.

To Cow. v. a. [from coward, by contraction.] To depress with fear; to oppress with habitual timidity.

Macduff was from his mother's womb
Untimely ripp'd—
Accur'd be that tongue that tells me so,
For it hath cow'd my better part of man. Shakspeare.

By reason of their frequent revolts, they have drawn upon themselves the pressures of war so often, that it seems to have somewhat cow'd their spirits. Herod's Vocal Forest.
For when men by their wives are cow'd,
Their horns of course are understood. Hudibras.

COW-HERD. n. f. [cow, and hyrd, Sax. a keeper.] One whose occupation is to tend cows.

COW-HOUSE. n. f. [cow and house.] The house in which kine are kept.
You must house your milch-cows, that you give hay to, in your cow-house all night. Mortimer.

COW-LEECH. n. f. [cow and leech.] One who professes to cure distempered cows.
To Cow-LEECH. v. n. To profess to cure cows.

Though there are many pretenders to the art of farriering and cow-leeching, yet many of them are very ignorant, especially in the country. Mortimer's Husbandry.

COW-WEED. n. f. [cow and weed.] A species of chervil.

COW-WHEAT. n. f. [cow and wheat.] A plant.

CO'WARD. n. f. [coward, Fr. of uncertain derivation.]

1. A poltroon; a wretch whose predominant passion is fear.

Pyrocles did such wonders, beyond belief, as was able to lead Mithridates to courage, though he had been born a coward. Sidney.

There was a soldier that vaunted, before Julius Cæsar, of the hurts he had received in his face. Cæsar, knowing him to be but a coward, told him, You were best take heed, next time you run away, how you look back. Bacon.

Some are brave one day, and cowards another, as great captains have often told me, from their own experience and observation. Temple.

A coward does not always escape with disgrace, but sometimes also he loses his life. South.
Tremble ye not, oh friends! and cowards fly,
Doom'd by the stern Telemachus to die! Pope.

2. It is sometimes used in the manner of an adjective.

Having more man than wit about me, I drew;
And rais'd the house with loud and coward cry. Shakspeare.

Invading fears repel my coward joy,
And ill foreseen the present bliss destroy. Prior.

CO'WARDICE. n. f. [from coward.] Fear; habitual timidity; pusillanimity; want of courage.

Certes, Sir knight, ye been too much to blame,

Thus far to blot the honour of the dead;

And with foul cowardice his carcass shame,
Whose living hands immortaliz'd his name. Fairy Queen.

Gallant and fearless courage will turn into a native and heroic valour, and make them hate the cowardice of doing wrong. Milton.

None was disgrac'd; for falling is no shame,
And cowardice alone is loss of fame:

The vent'rous knight is from the saddle thrown,
But 'tis the fault of fortune, not his own. Dryden.

This great, this holy, this terrible Being, is present to all our affections; sees every treacherous inclination of our heart to desert his service; and treasures up, against the day of his wrath, the secret cowardice which deters us from asserting his cause, which prevails on us to compliment the vices of the great, to applaud the libertine, and laugh with the prophane. Rogers.

CO'WARDLINESS. n. f. [from cowardly.] Timidity; cowardice.

CO'WARDLY. adj. [from coward.]

1. Fearful; timorous; pusillanimous.

An Egyptian southsayer made Antonius believe that his genius, otherwise brave and confident, was in the presence of Octavius poor and cowardly. Bacon's Natural History.

2. Mean; befitting a coward; proceeding from fear.

I do find it cowardly and vile,
For fear of what might fall, so to prevent
The time of life. Shakspeare.

Let all such as can enlarge their consciences like hell, and style a cowardly silence in Christ's cause discretion, know, that Christ will one day scorn them. Saunders.

CO'WARDLY. adv. In the manner of a coward; meanly; vilely.

He sharply reproved them as men of no courage, who had most cowardly turned their backs upon their enemies. Kneller.

CO'WARDSHIP. n. f. [from coward.] The character or qualities of a coward; meanness. Not in use.

A very paltry boy, and more a coward than a hare: his dishonesty appears in leaving his friend here in necessity, and denying him; and for his cowardship, ask Fabian. Shakspeare.

To Co'WER. v. n. [cwrrian, Welsh; courber, Fr. or perhaps borrowed from the manner in which a cow sinks on her knees.] To sink by bending the knees; to stoop; to shrink.

Let the pail be put over the man's head above water, then he cower down, and the pail be pressed down with him. Bacon.

The splitting rocks cow'r'd in the sinking sands,
And would not dash me with their ragged sides. Shakspeare.

As thus he spake, each bird and beast beheld,
Approaching two and two; these cowering low
With blandishment, each bird stoop'd on his wing. Milton.

Our dame sits cowering o'er a kitchen fire;
I draw fresh air, and nature's works admire. Dryden.

CO'WISH. adj. [from To cow, to awe.] Timorous; fearful; mean; pusillanimous; cowardly. Not in use.

It is the cowish terror of his spirit,
That dares not undertake: he'll not feel wrong,
Which tie him to an answer. Shakspeare.

CO'WKEEPER. n. f. [cow and keeper.] One whose business is to keep cows.

The terms cowkeeper and hogherd are not to be used in our poetry; but there are no finer words in the Greek language. Brown.

COWL. n. f. [cugle, Saxon; cucullus, Latin.]

1. A monk's hood.

You may imagine that Francis Cornfield did scratch his elbow, when he had sweetly invented, to signify his name, saint Francis with his fiery cowl in a cornfield. Camden.

COY

What differ more, you cry, than crown and cowl?

I'll tell you, friend, a wife man and a fool. Pope.
2. [Perhaps from cool, cooler, a vessel in which hot liquor is set to cool.] A vessel in which water is carried on a pole between two.

COWL-STAFF. n. f. [cowl and staff.] The staff on which a vessel is supported between two men.

Mounting him upon a cowl-staff,
Which (tossing him something high)
He apprehended to be Pegasus. Suckling.

The way by a cowl-staff is safer: the staff must have a bunch in the middle, somewhat wedge-like, and covered with a soft bolster. Wife-man.

CO'WSLIP. n. f. [parafsis; cur-lippe, Sax. as some think, from their resemblance of scent to the breath of a cow; perhaps from growing much in pasture grounds, and often meeting the cow's lip.]

Cowslip is also called pagil, grows wild in the meadows, and is a species of primrose. Miller.
He might as well say, that a cowslip is as white as a lily. Sidney.

Where the bee sucks, there suck I;
In a cowslip's bell I lie. Shakespeare.

Thy little sons
Permit to range the pastures: gladly they Will mow the cowslip posies, faintly sweet. Phillips.

COW-LUNGWORT. n. f. A species of mullin.

CO'XCOMB. n. f. [cock and comb, corrupted from cock's comb.]

1. The top of the head.

As the cockney did to the eels, when she put them i' the pasty alive; she rapt them o' th' coxcombs with a flick, and cried, down, wantons, down! Shakespeare.

2. The comb resembling that of a cock, which licensed fools wore formerly in their caps.

There, take my coxcomb: why, this fellow has banished two of his daughters, and did the third a blessing against his will: if thou follow him, thou must needs wear my coxcomb. Shak.

3. A top; a superficial pretender to knowledge or accomplishments.

I sent to her,
By this same coxcomb that we have i' th' wind,
Tokens and letters, which she did defend. Shak.
I scorn, quoth she, thou coxcomb filly,
Quarter or council from a foe. Hudibras.

It is a vanity for every pretending coxcomb to make himself one of the party still with his betters. L'Estrange.

They overflowed with smart repartees, and were only distinguished from the intended wits by being called coxcombs, though they deserved not so scandalous a name. Dryden.

Some are bewilder'd in the maze of schools,
And some made coxcombs, nature meant but fools. Pope.

4. A kind of red flower.

COXCOMICAL. adj. [from coxcomb.] Foppish; conceited: a low word, unworthy of use.

Because, as he was a very natural writer, and they were without prejudice, without prepossession, without affectation, and without the influence of coxcomical, senseless cabal, they were at liberty to receive the impressions which things naturally made on their minds. Dennis.

COY. adj. [coi, French; from quietus, Latin.]

1. Modest; decent.

COZ

Jafon is as coy as is a maide;
He looked pitiously, but nought he said. Chaucer.

2. Reserved; not accessible; not easily condescending to familiarity.

And vain delight the law he light did pass,
A foe of folly and immodest toy;

Still solemn sad, or still disdainful coy. Spenser.

Like Phœbus sung the no less am'rous boy:
Like Daphne thrice, as lovely and as coy. Waller.

At this season every smile of the sun, like the smile of a coy lady, is as dear as it is uncommon. Pope.

The Nile's coy source. Grainger.

To COY. v. n. [from the adjective.]

1. To behave with reserve; to reject familiarity.

What, coying it again!

No more; but make me happy to my gust,
That is, without your struggling. Dryden.

Retire! I beg you, leave me.—
—Thou to coy it!

With one who knows you too! Rowe.

2. To make difficulty; not to condescend willingly.

If he coy'd

To hear Cominius speak, I'll keep at home.
Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

To COY. v. a. [for decoy.] To allure. Not in use.

I'll mountebank their loves,

Coy their hearts from them, and come home beloved.

Of all the trades in Rome. Shakespeare.

CO'VLY. adv. [from coy.] With reserve; with disinclination to familiarity.

This faith, his hand he coyly wash'd away
From forth Antinous' hand. Chapman.

CO'YNESS. n. f. [from coy.] Reserve; unwillingness to become familiar.

When the sun hath warmed the earth and water, three or four male carps will follow a female; and the putting on a seeming coyness, they force her through weeds and flags.

When the kind nymph would coyness feign,
And hides but to be found again. Dryden.

CO'YSTREL. n. f. A species of degenerate hawk.

One they might trust, their common wrongs to wreak:

The mulket and the coystrel were too weak,
Too fierce the falcon. Dryden.

COZ. n. f. A cant or familiar word, contracted from coffin.

Be merry, coz; since sudden sorrow
Serves to say thus, some good thing comes to-morrow. Shakespeare.

To COZEN. v. a. [To sofe is in the old Scotch dialect, as Junius observes, to chop or change; whence cozen, to cheat; because in such traffick there is commonly fraud.] To cheat; to trick; to defraud.

Let the queen pay never so fully, let the master-matter view them never so diligently, let the deputy or general look to them never so exactly, yet they can cozen them all. Spenser.

Goring loved no man so well but that he would cozen him, and expose him to publick mirth for having been cozened. Clarendon.

He that suffers a government to be abused by carelessness or neglect, does the same thing with him that maliciously and corruptly sets himself to cozen it. L'Estrange.

You are not obliged to a literal belief of what the poet says; but you are pleased with the image, without being cozened by the fiction. Dryden.

What if I please to lengthen out his date
A day, and take a pride to cozen fate. Dryd.

Children may be cozened into a knowledge of the letters, and be taught to read, without perceiving it to be any thing but a sport. Lucas.

CRA

CO'ZENAGE. n. f. [from cozen.] Fraud; deceit; artifice; fallacy; trick; cheat; the practice of cheating.

They say this town is full of cozenage,
As nimble jugglers that deceive the eye,
Disguised cheaters. Shakespeare.

Wisdom without honesty is meer craft and cozenage; and therefore the reputation of honesty must first be gotten, which cannot be but by living well: a good life is a main argument. Ben Jonson's Discoveries.

There's no such thing as that we beauty call,
It is meer cozenage all;

For though some long ago
Like certain colours mingled so and so,
That doth not tie me now from chusing new. Suckling.

Imaginary appearances offer themselves to our impatient minds, which entertain these counterfeits, without the least suspicion of their cozenage. Giamville's Sceptis.

Strange cozenage! none would live past years
again,

Yet all hope pleasure in what yet remain;
And from the dregs of life think to receive
What the first brightly running could not give. Dryd. riv.

But all these are trides, if we consider the fraud and cozenage of trading men and shopkeepers. Swift.

CO'ZENER. n. f. [from cozen.] A cheater; a defrauder.

Indeed, sir, there are cozeners abroad, and therefore it behoves men to be wary. Shaksp.

CRAB. n. f. [crabba, Sax. krabbe, Dut.]

1. A crustaceous fish.

Those that eat their shell are, the lobster, the crab, the crawfish, the bodmended or dodman, and the tortoise. The old shells are never found; so as it is like they feat off and crumble away by degrees. Bacon's Natural History.

The fox catches crab fish with his tail, which Olus drigous (such he himself was an eye-witness of. Derham.

2. A wild apple; the tree that bears a wild apple.

Noble Rock

Was graft with crab tree filly, whose fruit then art. Shakespeare.

Fetch me a dozen crab tree slaves, and strong ones; these are but twitches. Shakespeare.

When roasted crabs hiss in the bowl,
Then nightly sing the fluting owl. Shakespeare.

Tell why a graft, taking nourishment from a crab stock, shall have a fruit more noble than its nurse and parent. Taylor.

3. A peevish morose person.

4. A wooden engine with three claws for launching of ships, or heaving them into the dock. Phillips.

5. The sign in the zodiack.

 Irish to creaght or graze upon their lands, or present them to ecclesiastical benefices. Davies.

To CREAK. v. n. [corrupted from crack.]

1. To make a harsh protracted noise.

Let not the creaking of shoes, nor the rustling of silks, betray thy poor heart to women.

Shakespeare's King Lear.

No door there was th' unguarded house to keep,

On creaking hinges turn'd, to break his sleep.
Dryden.

2. It is sometimes used of animals.

The creaking locusts with my voice conspire,
 They tried with heat, and I with fierce desire.
Dryden.

CREAM. n. f. [cremor, Latin.]

1. The unctuous or oily part of milk, which, when it is cold, floats on the top, and is changed by the agitation of the churn into butter; the flower of milk.

It is not your inky brows, your black silk hair,
 Your bugle eye-balls, nor your cheek of cream,
 That can entame my spirits to your worship.

Shakespeare.

I am as vigilant as a cat to steal cream. Shak.
Cream is matured and made to rise speedily,
 by putting in cold water; which, as it seemeth, getteth down the whey. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

How the drugging goblin swets,
 To earn his cream-bowl duly set;
 When in one night, ere glimpse of morn,
 His shadowy flail hath thruth'd the corn. Milt.

Let your various creams incircled be
 With swelling fruit, just ravi'd from the tree.

King.

Milk, standing some time, naturally separates into an oily liquor called cream; and a thinner, blue, and more ponderous liquor, called skimmed milk. Dryden's on silks.

 conry, a fine small line, fastened to a hawk's leash when she is first lured.

CREASE. n. f. [from creta, Latin, chalk. Skinner.] A mark made by doubling any thing.

Men of great parts are unfortunate in business, because they go out of the common road: I once desired lord Bolingbroke to observe, that the clerks used an ivory knife, with a blunt edge, to divide paper, which cut it even, only requiring a strong hand; whereas a sharp pen-VOL. I.

CRE

knife would go out of the crease, and disfigure
 the paper. Swift.

To CREASE. v. a. [from the noun.] To mark any thing by doubling it, so as to leave the impression.

To CREATE. v. a. [creo, Latin.]

1. To form out of nothing; to cause to exist.

In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth. Genesis.

We having but imperfect ideas of the operations of our minds, and much impetier yet of the operations of God, run into great difficulties about free created agents, which reason cannot well extricate itself out of. Locke.

2. To produce; to cause; to be the occasion of.

Now is the time of help: your eye in Scotland

Would create soldiers, and make women fight.
Shakespeare.

His abilities were prone to create in him great confidence of undertakings, and this was like enough to betray him to great errors and many enemies. King Charles.

They eclipse the clearest truths by difficulties of their own creating, or no man could miss his way to heaven for want of light. Decay of Piety.

None knew, till guilt created fear,

What darts or poison'd arrows were. Roscommon.

Must I new bars to my own joy create,

Refuse myself what I had forc'd from fate?

Arise, my knights o' th' battle: I create you

Companions to our person, and will fit you

With dignities becoming your estates. Shaksp.

5. To give any new qualities; to put any thing in a new state.

The best British undertaker had but a proportion of three thousand acres for himself, with power to create a manor, and hold a court-baron.

Davies on Ireland.

CREATION. n. f. [from create.]

1. The act of creating, or conferring existence.

Consider the immensity of the Divine Love, expressed in all the emanations of his providence;
 in his creation, in his conservation of us. Taylor.

2. The act of investing with new qualities or character: as, the creation of peers.

3. The things created; the universe.

As subjects then the whole creation came,

And from their natures Adam them did name.

Denham.

Such was the saint, who shone with ev'ry

grace,

Reflecting, Moses-like, his master's face:

God saw his image lively was express'd,

And his own work as his creation blest's'd

Dryden's Fables.

Nor could the tender new creation bear

Th' excessive heats or coldness of the year.

Dryden's Virgil.

In days of yore, no matter where or when,

Before the low creation swarm'd with men.

Parnell.

4. Any thing produced, or caused.

Art thou not, fatal vision, sensible

To feeling as to sight? Or art thou but

A dagger of the mind, a false creation,

Proceeding from the heat-oppressed brain?

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

CREATIVE. adj. [from create.]

1. Having the power to create.

CRE

But come, ye generous minds, in whose wide thought,

Of all his works, creative beauty burns
 With sweetest beam. Thompson's Spring.

2. Exerting the act of creation.

To trace the outgoings of the ancient of days in the first instance, and of his creative power, is a research too great for mortal enquiry.

South.

CREATOR. n. f. [creator, Latin.] The being that begets existence.

Open, ye heavens, your living doors; let in
 The great Creator, from his work return'd Magnificent; his six days work, a world.

Milton.

When you lie down, close your eyes with a short prayer, commit yourself into the hands of your faithful creator; and when you have done, trust him with yourself, as you must do when you're dying. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.

CREATURE. n. f. [creatura, low Latin.]

1. A being not self-existent, but created by the supreme power.

Were these persons idolaters for the worship they did not give to the creator, or for the worship they did give to his creatures. Stillingfleet.

2. Any thing created.

God's first creature was light. Bacon.

Imperfect the world, and all the creatures in it, must be acknowledged in many respects to be. Tillotson.

3. An animal, not human.

The queen pretended satisfaction of her knowledge only in killing creatures vile, as cats and dogs. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

4. A general term for man.

Yet crime in her could never creature find;
 But for his love, and for her own self sake,
 She wander'd had from one to other Ind. Spens.

Most curst of all creatures under sky,

Lo, Tantalus, I here tormented lie. Spenser.

Tho' he might burst his lungs to call for help,

No creature would assist or pity him. Roscommon.

5. A word of contempt for a human being.

Hence; home, you idle creatures, get you home;

Is this a holiday? Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

He would into the stews,

And from the common creatures pluck a glove,

And wear it as a favour. Shakespeare's Richard III.

I've heard that guilty creatures, at a play,

Have, by the very cunning of the scene,

Been struck so to the soul, that presently

They have proclaim'd their misdeeds.

Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Nor think to-night of thy ill nature,

But of thy follies, idle creature. Prior.

A good poet no sooner communicates his works, but it is imagined he is a vain young creature, given up to the ambition of fame.

Pope.

6. A word of petty tenderness.

And then, sir, would he gripe and wring my

hand;

Cry, Oh sweet creature, and then kiss me hard.

Shakespeare.

Ah, cruel creature, whom dost thou despise?

The gods, to live in woods, have left the skies.

Dryden's Virgil.

Some young creatures have learnt their letters and syllables by having them pasted upon little tablets. Watts.

Then weigh what loss your honour may sustain,

If with too credent ear you list his songs. Shakf.

2. Having credit; not to be questioned. Less proper.

My authority bears a credent bulk,
That no particular scandal once can touch,
But it confounds the breather. Shakespeare.

CRE'DENTIAL. n. f. [from credens, Lat.] That which gives a title to credit; the warrant upon which belief or authority is claimed.

A few persons of an odious and despised country could not have filled the world with believers, had they not shown undoubted credentials from the Divine Person who sent them on such a message. Addison on the Christian Relig.

CREDIBILITY. n. f. [from credibile.] Claim to credit; possibility of obtaining belief; probability.

The first of those opinions I shall shew to be altogether incredible, and the latter to have all the credibility and evidence of which a thing of that nature is capable. Tillotson.

Calculate the several degrees of credibility and conviction, by which the one evidence surpasseth the other. Atterbury.

CREDIBLE. adj. [from credibilis, Lat.] Worthy of credit; deserving of belief; having a just claim to belief.

The ground of credit is the credibility of things credited; and things are made credible, either by the known condition and quality of the utterer, or by the manifest likelihood of truth in themselves. Hosker.

None can demonstrate to me, that there is such an island as Jamaica; yet, upon the testimony of credible persons, I am free from doubt. Tillotson.

CREDIBLNESS. n. f. [from credibile.] Credibility; worthiness of belief; just claim to belief.

CRE

The credibleness of a good part of these narratives has been confirmed to me by a practitioner of physick. Boyle.

CRE'DIBLY. adv. [from credibile.] In a manner that claims belief.

This, with the loss of so few of the English as is scarce credible; being, as hath been rather confidently than credibly reported, but of one man, though not a few hurt. Bacon.

CRE'DIT. n. f. [from credit, French.]

1. Belief; faith yielded to another.

When the people heard these words, they gave no credit unto them, nor received them. 1 Maccabees.

I may give credit to reports. Addison's Spect.
Some secret truths, from learned pride conceal'd,

To maids alone and children are reveal'd:
What though no credit doubting wits may give,
The fair and innocent shall still believe. Pope.

2. Honour; reputation.

I published, because I was told I might please such as it was a credit to please. Pope.

3. Esteem; good opinion.

There is no decaying merchant, or inward beggar, hath so many tricks to uphold the credit of their wealth, as these empty persons have to maintain the credit of their sufficiency. Bacon.

His learning, though a poet said it,
Before a play, would lose no credit. Swift.

Yes, while I live, no rich or noble knave Shall walk the world in credit to his grave. Pope.

4. Faith; testimony; that which procures belief.

We are contented to take this upon your credit, and to think it may be. Hosker.

The things which we properly believe, be only such as are received upon the credit of divine testimony. Hosker.

The author would have done well to have left so great a paradox only to the credit of a single assertion. Locke.

5. Trust reposed, with regard to property: correlative to debt.

Credit is nothing but the expectation of money, within some limited time. Locke.

6. Promise given.

They have never thought of violating the public credit, or of alienating the revenues to other uses than to what they have been thus assigned. Addison.

7. Influence; power not compulsive; interest.

She employed his uttermost credit to relieve us, which was as great as a beloved son with a mother. Sidney.

He settled him in a good creditable way of living, having procured him by his interest one of the best places of the country. Arbuthnot.

2. Honourable; estimable.

The contemplation of things, that do not serve to promote our happiness, is but a more specious sort of idleness, a more pardonable and creditable kind of ignorance. Tillotson.

CRE'DITABLENESS. n. f. [from creditable.] Reputation; estimation.

Among all these snares, there is none more entangling than the creditableness and repute of customary vices. Devey of Piety.

CRE'DITABLY. adv. [from creditable.] Reputably; without disgrace.

Many will chuse rather to neglect their duty safely and creditably, than to get a broken pate in the church's service, only to be rewarded with that which will break their hearts too. South.

CRE'DITOR. n. f. [from creditor, Latin.]

1. He to whom a debt is owed; he that gives credit: correlative to debtor.

There came divers of Antonio's creditors in my company to Venice, that swear he cannot chuse but break. Shakespeare.

I am so used to consider myself as creditor and debtor, that I often state my accounts after the same manner, with regard to heaven and my own soul. Addison's Spectator.

No man of honour, as that word is usually understood, did ever pretend that his honour obliged him to be chaste or temperate, to pay his creditors, to be useful to his country, to do good to mankind, to endeavour to be wise or learned, to regard his word, his promise, or his oath. Swift.

2. One who credits, one who believes. Not used.

Many sought to feed
The easy creditors of novelties,
By voicing him alive. Shakespeare.

The poor Plangus, being subject to that only disadvantage of honest hearts, credulity, was persuaded by him. Sidney.

The prejudice of credulity may, in some measure, be cured, by learning to set a high value on truth. Watts' Logic.

CRE'DULOUS. adj. [from credulus, Latin.] Apt to believe; unsuspecting; easily deceived.

A credulous father, and a brother noble,
Whose nature is so far from doing harm,
That he suspects none. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Who now enjoys thee credulous all gold,
Who always vacillates, always amiable,
Hopes thee of flattery gales
Unmindful, hapless he,
T' whom thou untry'd seem'st fair. Milton.

CRE'DULOUSNESS. n. f. [from credulous.] Aptness to believe; credulity.

CREED. n. f. [from credo, the first word of the apostles creed.]

1. A form of words in which the articles of faith are comprehended.

The larger and fuller view of this foundation is set down in the creeds of the church. Hawson on Fundamentals.

Will they, who deny creeds and creedmakers, lay that one who writes a treatise of morality ought not to make in it any collection of moral precepts? Fiddes' Sermons.

2. Any solemn profession of principles or opinion.

For me, my lords,
I love him not, nor fear him; there's my creed. Shakespeare.

To CREEK. v. a. [See To CREAK.] To make a harsh noise.

Shall I stay here,

Creaking my shoes on the plain masonry? Shakspeare.
CREEK. n. f. [cnecca, Saxon; kreke, Dutch.]

1. A prominence or jut in a winding coast.

As streams, which with their winding banks do play,

Stopp'd by their creeks, run softly through the plain. Darvies.

They on the bank of Jordan, by a creek,
Where winds with reeds and others whilp'ring play,

Their unexpected loss and plaints outbreath'd. Milton.

2. A small port; a bay; a cove.

A law was made here to stop their passage in every port and creek. Darvies on Ireland.

3. Any turn, or alley.

A back-friend, a shoulder-clapper; one that commands the passages of alleys, creeks, and narrow lands. Shakspeare.

CREEKY. adj. [from creek.] Full of creeks; unequal winding.

Who, leaning on the belly of a pot,

Pour'd forth a water, whose out-gushing flood Run bathing all the creekly shore a-flot,

Whereon the Trojan prince spilt Turnus' blood. Spenser.

To CREEP. v. n. pret. crept. [cnypan, Saxon; krepan, German.]

1. To move with the belly to the ground, without legs, as a worm.

Ye that walk

The earth, and stately tread, or lowly creep!

And every creeping thing that creeps the ground. Milton.

If they cannot distinguish creeping from flying,
Let them lay down Virgil, and take up Ovid de Ponto. Dryden.

2. To grow along the ground, or on other supports.

The grots cool, with shady poplars crown'd,
And creeping vines on arbours weav'd around. Dryden.

3. To move forward without bounds or leaps, as insects.

4. To move slowly and feebly.

To-morrow, and to-morrow, and to-morrow,
Creeps in this petty pace from day to day,
To the last syllable of recorded time. Shakspeare.

Why should a man

Sleep when he wakes, and creep into the jaundice
By being peevish? Shakspeare's Much of Venice.

He who creeps after plum, dull, common sense, is safe from committing absurdities, but can never reach the excellence of wit. Dryden.

5. To move secretly and clandestinely.

I'll creep up into the chimney —

—There they always use to discharge their birding-pieces: creep into the kiln-hole. Shakspeare.

Whatever you are,

That in this desert inaccessible,
Under the shade of melancholy boughs

Loss and neglect the creeping hours of time. Shakspeare.

Of this sort are they which creep into houses,
and lead captive silly women. Timothy

Thou makest darkness, and it is night wherein all the beasts of the forest do creep forth. Psalm.

Now and then a work or two has crept in, to keep his first design in countenance. Atterbury.

6. To move timorously without soaring, or venturing into dangers.

Paradise Lost is admirable; but am I therefore bound to maintain, that there are no flats amongst his elevations, when it is evident he creeps along sometimes for above an hundred lines together? Dryden.

We here took a little boat, to creep along the sea-shore as far as Genoa. Addison on Italy.

7. To come unexpected; to steal forward unheard and unseen.

By those gifts of nature and fortune he creeps, nay he flies, into the favour of poor silly women. Sidney.

It seems, the marriage of his brother's wife
Has crept too near his conscience. —

No, his conscience
Has crept too near another lady. Shakspeare.

Necessity enforced them, after they grew full of people, to spread themselves, and creep out of Shinar, or Babylon.

None pretends to know from how remote corners of those frozen mountains some of those fierce nations first crept out. Temple.

The beginnings of philosophy were in a crepusculous obscurity, and it is yet scarce past the dawn. Glanville's Scripsi.

CRESCENT. adj. [from creresco, Latin.]

Increasing; growing; in a state of increase.

I have seen him in Britain: he was then of a crescent note. Shakspeare's Cymbeline.

With these in troop
Came Astoreth, whom the Phœnicians call'd Astarte, queen of heaven, with crescent horns. Milton.

CRESCENT. n. f. [crescens, Lat.] The moon in her state of increase; any similitude of the moon increasing.

My power's a crescent, and my auguring hope Says it will come to th' full. Shakspeare.

Or Baſtian ſophy, from the horns
Of Turkish crescents, leaves all waste beyond
The realm of Aladule, in his retreat. Milton.

Jove in dusky clouds involves the skies,
And the faint crescent shows by fits before their eyes. Dryden.

And two fair crescents of translucent horn
The brows of all their young increase adorn. Pope's Odyssey.

CRESCIVE. adj. [from creresco, Latin.]

Increasing; growing.

So the prince obscur'd his contemplation
Under the veil of wildness, which no doubt Grew, like the summer grass, fastest by night,
Unseen, yet crescentive in his faculty. Shakspeare.

CRESS. n. f. [perhaps from creresco, it being a quick grower; nagurium, Latin.]

An herb.

Its flower consists of four leaves, placed in form of a cross: the pointal arises from the centre of the flower-cup, and becomes a roundish smooth fruit, divided into two cells, and furnished with seeds, generally smooth. Miller.

His court, with nettles and with cresses stor'd,
With soups unbought, and sallads, blest his board. Pope.

CRESSET. n. f. [crosseſſe, Fr. because beacons had crosses anciently on their tops.] A great light set upon a beacon, lighthouse, or watchtower. Hawmer.

They still raise armies in Scotland by carrying about the fire-cross.

At my nativity
The front of heav'n was full of fiery sparks,
Of burning cresses. Shakspeare's Henry IV.

From the arched roof,
Pendent by subtle magick, many a row
Of starry lamps, and blazing cresses, fed
With naphtha and asphaltus, yielded light
As from a sky. Milton's Paradise Lost.

CREST. n. f. [crista, Latin.]

1. The plume of feathers on the top of the ancient helmet; the helmet.

His valour, shown upon our crests to-day,
Has taught us how to cherish such high deeds,
Even in the bosom of our adversaries. Shakspeare.

2. The comb of a cock: whence Milton calls him crested.

Others on ground
Walk'd firm; the crested cock, whose claxon
sounds
The silent hours. Milton's Paradise Lost.

3. The ornament of the helmet in heraldry.

Of what esteem crests were, in the time of king Edward the Third's reign, may appear by his giving an eagle, which he himself had formerly born, for a crest to William Montacute, earl of Salisbury. Camden's Remains.

CRE

The horn;
It was a crest ere thou wast born:
Thy father's father wore it. Shakespeare

4. Any tuft or ornament on the head; as some which the poets assign to serpents.

Their crests divide,
And, towering o'er his head, in triumph tide. Deuter's Virgil.

CRIMSON. n. f. [crimfino, Italian.]

1. Red, somewhat darkened with blue.

As crimson seem to be little else than a very deep red, with an eye of blue; so some kinds of red seem to be little else than heightened yellow.
Boyle on Colours.

Why does the foil endure
The blushing poppy with a crimson hue? Prior.

2. Red in general.

Can you blame her then, being a maid yet robed over with the virgin crimson of modesty, if she deny the appearance of a naked hind boy, in her naked feeling self? Shakespeare.

Beauty's ensign yet
Is crimson in thy lips, and in thy cheeks. Shaksp.
The crimson stream stain'd his arms around,
And the disdainful soul came rushing through the wound. Dryden's Æneid.

To CRIMSON. v. a. [from the noun.] To die with crimson.

Pardon me, Julius. Here wast thou bay'd, brave hart!

Here did'st thou fall; and here thy hunters stand Sign'd in thy spoil, and crimson'd in thy lethe. Shakespeare.

CRINCUM. n. f. [a cant word.] A cramp;
a contraction; whimfy.

For jealousy is but a kind
Of clap and crincum of the mind. Hudib.

To CRINGE. v. a. [from kriechen, ness. DiB.

CRIPPLE. n. f. [enypel, Sax. krepel, Dutch.] A lame man; one that has lost or never enjoyed the use of his limbs. Donne, with great appearance of propriety, writes it creep, from creep.

He, poor man, by your first order died,
And that a winged Mercury did bear:
Some tardy cripple had the countermand,
That came too lag to see him buried. Shakespeare.
I am a cripple in my limbs; but what decays are in my mind, the reader must determine.
Dryden.

Among the rest there was a lame cripple from his birth, whom Paul commanded to stand upright on his feet. Beattie.

See the blind beggar dance, the cripple sing,
The sot a hero, lunatick a king. Pope.

To CRIPPLE. v. a. [from the noun.]

To lame; to make lame; to deprive of the use of limbs.

Knots upon his gouty joints appear,
And chalk is in his crippled fingers found. Dryd.

DiB.

CRISIS. n. f. [κρίσις.]

1. The point in which the disease kills, or changes to the better; the decisive moment when sentence is passed.

Wife leeches will not vain receipts intrude;
Deaf to complaints, they wait upon the ill,
Till some late crisis authorize their skill. Dryden.

2. The point of time at which any affair comes to the height.

This hour's the very crisis of your fate
Your good or ill, your infamy or fame,
And all the colour of your life, depends
On this important now. Dryden.

The undertaking, which I am now laying down, was entered upon in the very crisis of the late rebellion, when it was the duty of every Briton to contribute his utmost assistance to the government, in a manner suitable to his station and abilities. Addison's Freeholder.

CRISP. adj. [crispus, Latin.]

1. Curled.

Bulls are more crisp on the forehead than cows.

The Ethiopian black, flat nosed, and crisp haired.
Hale.

2. Indented; winding.

You nymphs, call'd Naiads, of the winding brooks,

With your sedg'd crowns, and ever harmless looks,

Leave your crisp channels, and on this green
land

Answer your summons; Juno does command.
Shakespeare.

3. Brittle; friable.

In frosty weather, musick within doors found-eth better; which may be by reason, not of the disposition of the air, but of the wood or string of the instrument, which is made more crisp, and so more porous and hollow. Bacon.

To CRISP. v. a. [crispo, Latin.]

1. To curl; to contract into knots or curls.

Severn, affrighted with their bloody looks,
Ran fearfully among the trembling reeds,
And hid his crisp'd head in the hollow bank.
Shakespeare's Henry iv.

Young I'd have him too;
Yet a man with crisp'd hair,
Call in troutland tapers and rings,
For love's fingers, and his rings. Ben Jonson.

Spirit of wine is not only unfit for inharmantation in general, but also crisp up the vessels of the dura mater and brain, and sometimes produces a gangrene. Sharp's Surgery.

So are those crispy maky locks, oft known
To be the dowry of a second head. Shakespeare.

CRITERION. n. f. [κρίτηριον.] A mark

by which any thing is judged of, with regard to its goodness or badness.

Mutual agreement and endorsement was the badge of primitive believers; but we may be known by the contrary criterion. Glennville.

We have here a sure infallible criterion, by which every man may discover and find out the gracious or ungracious disposition of his own heart. South.

By what criterion do you eat, d'ye think,
If this is priz'd for sweetness, that for stink?
Pope's Horace.

CRITICK. n. f. [κρίτικος.]

1. A man skilled in the art of judging of literature; a man able to distinguish the faults and beauties of writing.

This settles truer ideas in men's minds of several things, whereof we read the names in ancient authors, than all the large and laborious arguments of criticks. Locke.

Now learn what morals criticks ought to show,
For 'tis but half a judge's task to know. Pope.

2. An examiner; a judge.

But you with pleasure own your errors past,
And make each day a critick on the last. Pope.

3. A slanderer; a carper; a caviller.

Criticks I saw, that others names deface,
And fix their own with labour in their place.
Pope.

Where an author has many beauties confluent with virtue, piety, and truth, let not little criticks exalt themselves, and shower down their ill-nature. Watts.

4. A censurer; a man apt to find fault.

My chief design, next to seeing you, is to be a severe critick on you and your neighbour.

Swift.

CRITICK. adj. Critical; relating to criticism; relating to the art of judging of literary performances.

Thence arts o'er all the northern world advance,
But critick learning flourish'd most in France.

Pope's

CRITICK. n. f.

1. A critical examination; critical remarks; animadversions.

I should be glad if I could persuade him to continue his good offices, and write such another critick on any thing of mine. Dryden.

I should as soon expect to see a critique on the poetry of a ring, as on the inscription of a medal. Addison on Medals.

2. Science of criticism.

If ideas and words were distinctly weighed, and duly considered, they would afford us another sort of logic and critick than what we have been hitherto acquainted with. Locke.

What is every year of a wife man's life, but a censure and critique on the past? Pope.

Not that my quill to criticks was confin'd;
My verse gave ample lessons to mankind. Pope.

To CRITICK. v. n. [from the noun.]

a cross to pay them salary. Howell.

Whereas we cannot much lament our loss,
Who neither carried back nor brought one cross! Dryden.

7. Cross and Pile, a play with money; at which it is put to chance whether the side, which bears a cross, shall lie upward, or the other.

Whacum had neither cross nor pile;
His plunder was not worth the while. Hudibras.

This I humbly conceive to be perfect horseplay; cross, I win, and pile, you lose; or, what's your's is mine, and what's mine is my own. Swift.

8. Church lands in Ireland.

The absolute palatines made their own judges, so as the king's writ did not run in those counties, but only in the church lands lying within the same, which were called the crofs; wherein the king made a sheriff: so in each of these counties palatines there was one sheriff of the liberty, and another of the crofs. Sir J. Davies.

Cross. adj. [from the substantive.]

buttocks of the horſe.] That part of the horſeman's furniture that reaches from the ſaddle to the tail.

Clitophon had received ſuch a blow, that he had loſt the reins of his horſe, with his head well nigh touching the crupper of the horſe.
Sidney.

Where have you left the money that I gave you?

—Oh—fixpence that I had a Wednesday laſt,
To pay the ſadler for my miſtreſs' crupper.
Shakfpeare.

Full oft the rivals met, and neither ſpar'd
His utmoſt force, and each forgot to ward:
The head of this was to the ſaddle bent,
The other backward to the crupper ſent. Dryd.

CRURAL. adj. [from crus, cruris, Lat.]
Belonging to the leg.

The ſharpneſs of the teeth, and the ſtrength of the crural muſcles, in lions and tygers, are the

I wanted weight of feeble Moons upon me,
To cruſh my ſoul out. Dryden.

CRU

2. To press with violence.

You speak him far—
—I don't extend him, sir: within himself
Crush him together, rather than unfold
His measure fully. Shakespeare.
When loud winds from different quarters rush,
Vast clouds encounter, ring one another crush.
Waller.

3. To overwhelm; to beat down.

Put in their hands thy bruising irons of wrath,
That they may crush down, with a heavy fall,
Th' usurping helmets of our adversaries!
Shakespeare.
Vain is the force of man, and heav'n's as vain,
To crush the pillars which the pile sustain.
Dryden.

4. To subdue; to conquer beyond resistance.

They use them to plague their enemies, or to oppress and crush some of their own too stubborn freeholders. Spenser on Ireland.
Mine emulation
Hath not that honour in 't it had; for
I thought to crush him in an equal force,
True sword to sword. Shakespeare.

This act
Shall bruise the head of Satan, crush his strength, Defeating sin and death, his two main arms.
Milton.

What can that man fear, who takes care to please a Being that is so able to crush all his adversaries? a Being that can divert any misfortune from befalling him, or turn any such misfortune to his advantage? Addison's Guardian.

To CRUSH. v. n. To be condensed; to come in a close body.

CRUSH. n. f. [from the verb.] A collision; the act of rushing together.
Thou shalt flourish in immortal youth,
Unhurt amidst the war of elements,
The wrecks of matter, and the crush of worlds.
Addison's Cato.

CRUST. n. f. [crusta, Latin.]

1. Any shell, or external coat, by which any body is enveloped.

I have known the statue of an emperor quite hid under a crust of dross. Addison.

2. An incrustation; collection of matter into a hard body.

Were the river a confusion of never so many different bodies, if they had been all actually dissolved, they would at least have formed one continued crust; as we see the scum of metals always gathers into a solid piece. Addison.
The viscous crust stops the entry of the chyle into the lactals. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

3. The case of a pie, made of meal, and baked.

He was never suffered to go abroad, for fear

You'll with me chok'd with every crust of bread.
Men will do tricks, like dogs, for crusts.
L'Esrange.

To CRUST. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To envelop; to cover with a hard case.

Why gave you me a monarch's soul,
And crusted it with base plebeian clay? Dryden.
Nor is it improbable but that, in process of time, the whole surface of it may be crusted over,
as the islands enlarge themselves, and the banks close in upon them. Addison on Lakes.

CRY

And now their legs, and breasts, and bodies flood Crusted with bark, and hard'ning into wood.
Addison.

In some, who have run up to men without education, we may observe many great qualities darkened and eclipsed; their minds are crusted over, like diamonds in the rock. Edison.

2. To foul with concretions.

If your master hath many musty, or very foul and crusted bottles, let those be the first you truck

The egg itself deserves our notice: its parts within, and its crusty coat without, are admirably well fitted for the business of incubation.
Derham's Physico-Theology.

2. Sturdy; morose; snappish: a low word.

CRUTCH. n. f. [croccia, Ital. croce, French; crucke, German.]

1. A support used by cripples.

Ah, thus king Henry throws away his crutch,
Before his legs be firm to bear his body. Shakspeare.
Hence, therefore, thou nice crutch:
A scaly gauntlet now, with joints of steel,
Must glove this hand. Shakspeare's Henry IV.
On these new crutches let them learn to walk.
Dryden's Georgicks.

This fair defect, this helpless aid call'd wife,
The bending crutch of a decrepit life. Dryden.
Rhyme is a crutch that lifts the weak along,
Supports the feeble, but retards the strong.
Smith.

The dumb shall sing, the lame his crutch
forego,
And leap vaulting like the bounding roe.
Pope.

2. It is used for old age.

Beauty dotes with age, as if new born,
And gives the crutch the cradle's infancy. Shakspeare.

To CRUTCH. v. a. [from crutch.] To support on crutches as a cripple.

I hasten Og and Dug to rehearse,
Two fools that crutch their feeble sense on verse.
Dryden.

5. To exclaim.

Yet let them look they glory not in mischief,
Nor build their evils on the graves of great men,
For then my guiltless blood must cry against them.
Shakspeare.

What's the matter,
That in the several places of the city
You cry against the noble senate? Shakspeare.
If dressing, mistreßing, and compliment,
Take up thy day, the sun himself will cry
Against thee. Herbert.

Lyimachus having obtained the favour of seeing his ships and machines, surpris'd at the contrivance, cried out, that they were built with more than human art. Arbuthnot on Coma.

6. To utter lamentations.

We came crying hither;
Thou know'st, the first time that we smell the
air,
We wail and cry. Shakspeare's King Lear.

Behold, my servants shall sing for joy of heart;
but ye shall cry for sorrow of heart, and shall howl for vexation of spirit. Isaiah.

When any evil has been upon philosophers, they groan as pitifully, and cry out as loud, as other men. Tillettson.

7. To squall, as an infant.

Should some god tell me, that I should be born,
And cry again, his offer I should scorn. Denham.
Thus, in a starry night, fond children cry
For the rich sparkles that adorn the sky. Waller.
He struggles first for breath, and cries for aid;
Then helpless in his mother's lap is laid. Dryden.
The child certainly knows, that the wormseed or mouldard-seed it refuses, is not the apple or sugar it cries for. Leland.

8. To weep; to shed tears.

Her who still weeps with spongy eyes,
And her who is dry cork, and never cries.
Denham.

9. To utter an inarticulate voice, as an animal.

He giveth to the beast his food, and to the young ravens which cry. Psalms.
The beasts of the field cry also unto thee. Jed.

10. To yelp, as a hound on a scent.

He cried upon it at the matted lot;
Trust me, I take him for the better d. c.
Shakspeare.

To CRY. v. a. To proclaim publickly something lost or found, in order to its recovery or restitution.

She seeks, she sighs, but no where spies him:
Love is lost, and thus she cries him. Crowder.

To CRY down. v. a.

1. To blame; to depreciate; to decry.

Bavius cries down an admirable treatise of philosophy, and says there's atheism in it. Harris.
Men of dissolute lives cry down religion, because they would not be under the restraints of it.
Tillettson.

2. To prohibit.

By all means cry down that unworthy course of late times, that they should pay money. Bentley.

3. To overbear.

I'll to the king,
And from a mouth of honour quite cry down
This Ipswich fellow's influence. Shakspeare.

To CRY out. v. n.

1. To exclaim; to scream; to clamour.

They make the oppressed to cry; they cry out by reason of the arm of the mighty. Job.
With that Susanna cried with a loud voice,
and the two elders cried out against her. Susan.

2. To complain loudly.

We are ready to cry out of an unequal management, and to blame the Divine administration. Atterbury.

3. To blame; to censure: with of, against, upon.

Are these things then necessities?

Then let us meet them like necessities;

And that same word even now cries out on us. Shakespeare.

Giddy censure

Will then cry out of Maucius: oh, if he Had borne the business. Shakespeare.

Behold, I cry out of wrong, but I am not heard. Job.

Cry out upon the stars for doing

Ill offices, to cross their wooing. Hudibras.
Epiphanius cries out upon it, as rank idolatry, and destructive to their souls who did it. Stillingfleet.

Tumult, sedition, and rebellion, are things that the followers of that hypocritus cry out against. Locke.

I find every sect, as far as reason will help them, make use of it gladly; and where it fails them, they cry out, it is matter of faith, and above reason. Locke.

4. To declare loud.

5. To be in labour.

What! is she crying out?

—So said her woman; and that her sull'rance made

Each pang a death. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

To CRY up. v. a.

1. To applaud; to exalt; to praise.

Instead of crying up all things which are brought from beyond sea, let us advance the native commodities of our own kingdom. Bacon.

The philosopher dervedly suspected himself of vanity, when cried up by the multitude. Glanville's Scipio.

The astrologer, if his predictions come to pass, is cried up to the stars from whence he pretends to draw them. South.

They slight the strongest arguments that can be brought for religion, and cry up very weak ones against it. Tillotson.

He may, out of interest, as well as conviction, cry up that fox sacred, which, if once trampled on and profaned, he himself cannot be safe, nor secure. Locke.

Poets, like monarchs, on an eastern throne,
Confin'd by nothing but their will alone,
Here can cry up, and there as boldly blame,
And, as they please, give infamy or fame. Wolfe.

Those who are fond of continuing the war, cry up our constant success at a most prodigious rate. Swift.

2. To raise the price by proclamation.

All the effect that I conceive was made by crying up the pieces of eight, was to bring in much more of that species, instead of others current here. Temple.

CRY. n. f. [cri, French.]

1. Lamentation; shriek; scream.

And all the first born in the land of Egypt shall die, and there shall be a great cry throughout all the land. Exodus.

2. Weeping; mourning.

3. Clamour; outcry.

Amazement seizes all; the general cry
Proclaims Læocoon justly doom'd to die. Dryden.
These narrow and selfish views have so great an influence in this cry, that there are several of my fellow fireholders who fancy the church in danger upon the rising of bank-ruck. Adelphi.

4. Exclamation of triumph or wonder, or any other passion.

In popish countries some impostor cries out, a miracle! a miracle! to confirm the deluded vulgar in their errors; and so the cry goes round, without examining into the cheat. Swift.

5. Proclamation,

6. The hawkers proclamation of wares to be sold in the street: as, the cries of London.

7. Acclamation; popular favour.

The cry went once for thee,
And still it might, and yet it may again. Shaksf.

8. Voice; utterance; manner of vocal expression.

Sounds also, besides the distinct cries of birds and beasts, are modified by diversity of notes of different length, put together, which make that complex idea called tune. Locke.

9. Importunate call.

Pray not thou for this people, neither lift up cry nor prayer for them. Jeremiah.

10. Yelping of dogs.

He scorns the dog, resolves to try
The combat next; but if their cry
Invades again his trembling ear,
He straight resumes his wonted care. Waller.

11. Yell; inarticulate noise.

There shall be the noise of a cry from the fish-gate, and an howling from the second, and a great crashing from the hills. Zephaniah.

12. A pack of dogs.

About her middle round,
A cry of hell-hounds never ceasing bark'd. Milt.
You common cry of curs, whole breath I hate
As reek o' th' rotten fens; whose loves I prize
As the dead carcases of unburied men,
That do corrupt my air. Shaksf. Coriolanus.

CRYAL. n. f. The heron. Ainsworth.

CRYER. See CRIER.

CRY'ER. n. f. A kind of hawk, called the falcon gentle, an enemy to pigeons, and very swift. *Ainsworth.*CRYPTICAL. } adj. [cryptos.] Hid-CRYPTICK. } den; secret; occult;
private; unknown; not divulged.

The students of nature, conscious of her more cryptick ways of working, resolve many strange effects into the near efficiency of second causes.

Glanville's Apst.

Speakers, whose chief business is to amuse or delight, do not confine themselves to any natural order, but in a cryptical or hidden method adapt every thing to their ends. Watts.

CRYPTICALLY. adv. [from cryptical.] Occultly; secretly: perhaps, in the following example, the author might have written critically.

We take the word acid in a familiar sense without cryptically distinguishing it from those factors that are akin to it. Boyle.

CRYPTOGRAPHY. n. f. [κρυπτα and γραφω.]

1. The art of writing secret characters.

2. Secret characters; ciphers.

CRYPTOLOGY. n. f. [κρυπτα and λογω.]

Enigmatical language.

CRYSTAL. n. f. [κρύσταλλος.]

1. Crystals are hard, pellucid, and naturally colourless bodies, of regularly angular figures, composed of simple, not filamentous plates, or flexile or clastick, giving fire with steel, not fermenting with acid menstrua, and calcining in a strong fire. There are many various species of it produced in different parts of the globe. Hill on Fossils.

Island crystal is a genuine spar, of an extremely pure, clear, and fine texture, seldom either blemished with flaws or spots, or stained with any other colour. A remarkable property of this body, which has much employed the writers on optics, is its double refraction; so that if it be laid over a black line, drawn on paper, two lines appear in the place of one. Hill.

Water, as it seems, turneth into crystal; as is seen in divers caves, where the crystal hangs in filliciditi. Bacon.

If crystal be a stone, it is not immediately concreted by the efficacy of cold, but rather by a mineral spirit. Brown.

Crystal is certainly known and distinguished by the degree of its diaphaneity and of its refraction, as also of its hardness, which are ever the same.

Woodward.

2. Crystal is also used for a facitious body cast in the glass-houses, called also crystal glass, which is carried to a degree of perfection beyond the common glass; though it comes far short of the whiteness and vivacity of the natural crystal. *Chambers.*3. Crystals [in chymistry] express salts or other matters shot or congealed in manner of crystal. Chambers.

If the menstruum be overcharged, within a short time the metals will shoot into certain crystals. Bacon.

CRYSTAL. adj.

1. Consisting of crystal.

Then, Jupiter, thou king of gods,
Thy crystal window open, look out. Shakespeare.

2. Bright; clear; transparent; lucid; pellucid.

In groves we live, and lie on mossy beds,
By crystal streams that murmur through the meads. Dryden.

CRYSTALLINE. adj. [crystallinus, Lat.]

1. Consisting of crystal.

Mount eagle to my palace crystalline. Shaksf.
We provided ourselves with some small receivers, blown of crystalline glass. Boyle.

2. Bright; clear; pellucid; transparent.

The clarifying of water is an experiment tending to the health; besides, the pleasure of the eye, when water is crystalline. It is effected by casting in and placing pebbles at the head of the current, that the water may strain through them.
Bacon's Natural History.

He on the wings of cherub rode sublime

On the crystalline sky, in saphir thron'd

Illustrious far and wide. Milton.

CRYSTALLINE Humour. n. f. The second humour of the eye, that lies immediately next to the aqueous behind the uvea, opposite to the papilla, nearer to the fore part than the back part of the globe. It is the least of the humours, but much more solid than any of them.

Its figure, which is convex on both sides, resembles two unequal segments of spheres, of which the most convex is on its backside, which makes a small cavity in the glassy humour in which it lies. It is covered with a fine coat, called aranea.

The parts of the eye are made convex, and especially the crystalline humour, which is of a lenticular figure, convex on both sides. Ray.

CRYSTALLIZA'TION. n. f. [from crystallize.]

1. Congelation into crystals.

Such a combination of saline particles as resembles the form of a crystal, variously modified,
according to the nature and texture of the salts.
The method is by dissolving any saline body in water, and filtering it, to evaporate, till a film appear at the top, and then let it stand to shoot; and this it does by that attractive force which is in all bodies, and particularly in salt, by reason of its solidity: whereby, when the menstruum or fluid, in which such particles flow, is fixed enough or evaporated, so that the saline particles are within each other's attractive powers, they draw one another more than they are drawn by the fluid, such will they run into crystals. And this is peculiar to those, that, let them be ever so much divided and reduced into minute particles, yet when they are formed into crystals, they each of them reassume their proper shapes; so that one might as easily divest them of their flatness, as of their figure. This being an immutable and perpetual law, by knowing the figure of the crystals, we may understand what the texture of the particles ought to be, which can form those crystals; and, on the other hand, by knowing the texture of the particles, may be determined the figure of the crystals. Quincy.

2. The mass formed by congelation or concretion.

All natural metallick and mineral crystallizations were effected by the water, which first brought the particles, whereof each consists, out from amongst the matter of the strata. Woodw.

To CRYSTALLIZE. v. a. [from crystal.]

To cause to congeal or concrete in crystals.

If you dissolve copper in aqua fortis, or spirit of nitre, you may, by crystallizing the solution, obtain a goodly blue. Boyle.

To CRYSTALLIZE. v. n. To coagulate, congeal, concrete, or shoot into crystals.

Recent urine will crystallize by inspissation, and afford a salt neither acid nor alkaline. Arbutnotus on Aliments.

CUB. n. f. [of uncertain etymology.]

1. The young of a beast; generally of a bear or fox.

I would outface the sternest eyes that look,
Pluck the young sucking cubs from the she-bear. Shakespeare.

This night, wherein the cub-drawn bear would couch,

The lion, and the belly-pinched wolf,
Keep their fur dry. Shakespeare's King Lear.

In the eagle's destroying one fox's cub, there's power executed with oppression. L'Estrange.

2. The young of a whale, perhaps of any viviparous fish.

Two mighty whales, which swelling seas had tost,

One as a mountain vast, and with her came
A cub, not much inferior to his dame. Waller.

3. In reproach or contempt, a young boy or girl.

O thou dissembling cub! what wilt thou be,
When time hath sow'd a grizzle on thy case?
Or will not else thy craft so quickly grow,
That thine own trip shall be thine overthrow? Shakespeare.

O most comical fight! a country squire,
with the equipage of a wife and two daughters, came to Mr. Snipwel's shop last night; but, such two unlicked cubs! Congreve.

To CUB. v. a. [from the noun.] To bring forth: used of beasts, or of a woman in contempt.

Cubb'd in a cabin, on a matress laid,
On a brown george with lousy swabbers fed;
Dead wine, that stinks of the Burchio, sup
From a foul jack, or greasy maple cup. Dryden.

CUBATION. n. f. [cubatio, Latin.] The act of lying down. Diæ.

CUBATORY. adj. [from cubo, Lat.] Recumbent. Diæ.

CUBATURE. n. f. [from cube.] The finding exactly the solid content of any proposed body. Harris.

CUBE. n. f. [from κύβη, a die.]

1. [In geometry.] A regular solid body, consisting of six square and equal faces or sides, and the angles all right, and therefore equal. Chambers.

2. [In arithmetick.] See CUBICK Number.

All the matter planets move about the sun at several distances, as their common centre, and with different velocities. This common law being observed in all of them, that the squares of the times of the revolutions are proportional to the cubes of their distances. Grew.

CUBE Root. } n. f. The origin of a CUBICK Root. } cubick number; or a number, by whose multiplication into itself, and again into the product, any given number is formed: thus two is the cube-root of eight. Chambers.

CUBEB. n. f. A small dried fruit resembling pepper, but somewhat longer, of a greyish brown colour on the surface. It has an aromatick smell, and is acrid to the taste. Cubeb is brought from Java. Hill.

Aromaticks, as cubeb, cinnamon, and nutmegs, are usually put into crude poor wines, to give them more oily spirits. Floyer.

CUBICAL. } adj. [from cube.]

1. Having the form or properties of a cube.

A close vessel containing ten cubical feet of air, will not suffer a wax candle of an ounce to burn in it above an hour before it be suffocated. Wilkins's Mathematical Mag.

It is above a hundred to one, against any particular throw, that you do not cast any given set of faces with four cubical dice; because there are so many several combinations of the six faces of four dice. Bentley's Sermons.

2. It is applied to numbers.

The number of four, multiplied into itself, produceth the square number of sixteen; and that again multiplied by four, produceth the cubick number of sixty-four. If we should suppose a multitude actually infinite, there must be infinite roots, and square and cubick numbers; yet, of necessity, the root is but the fourth part of the square, and the sixteenth part of the cubick number. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

The number of ten hath been as highly extolled, as containing even, odd, long and plain, quadrate and cubical numbers. Brown.

CUBICALNESS. n. f. [from cubical.] The state or quality of being cubical.

CUBICULARY. adj. [cubiculum, Latin.] Fitted for the posture of lying down.

Custom, by degrees, changed their cubicular beds into discubitory, and introduced a fashion to go from the baths unto these. Brown.

CUBIFORM. adj. [from cube and form.] Of the shape of a cube.

CUBIT. n. f. [from cubitus, Latin.] A measure in use among the ancients; which was originally the distance from the elbow, bending inwards, to the extremity of the middle finger. This measure is the fourth part of a well-proportioned man's stature. Some fix the Hebrew cubit at twenty inches and a half, Paris measure; and others at eighteen. Galmet.

From the tip of the elbow to the end of the long finger, is half a yard, and a quarter of the stature; and makes a cubit, the first measure we read of, the ark of Noah being framed and measured by cubits. Holler on Time.

Measur'd by cubit, length, and breadth, and height. Milton.

The Jews used two sorts of cubits; the sacred, and the profane or common one. Arbutnot.

When on the goddess first I cast my sight, Scarce seem'd her stature of a cubit height. Pope.

CUBITAL. adj. [cubitalis, Latin.] Containing only the length of a cubit.

The watchmen of Tyre might well be called pygmies, the towers of that city being so high, that unto men below they appeared in a cubital stature. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CUCKINGSTOOL. n. f. An engine invented for the punishment of scolds and unquiet women, which, in ancient times, was called tumbrel. Cowell.

These mounted on a chair-curule,
Which moderns call a cucking-stool,
March proudly to the river's side. Hudibras.

CUCKOLD. n. f. [cocu, French, from coucou.] One that is married to an adulteress; one whose wife is false to his bed.

But for all the whole world; why, who would not make her husband a cuckold, to make him a monarch? I should venture purgatory for 't. Shakespeare's Othello.

There have been,

Or I am much deceiv'd, cuckolds ere now;
And many a man there is, ev'n at this present,
Now while I speak this, holds his wife by th' arm,
That little thinks she has been sluic'd in 's absence. Shakespeare.

For though the law makes null th' adulterer's deed

Of lands to her, the cuckold may succeed. Dryd.
Ever since the reign of king Charles II. the alderman is made a cuckold, the deluded virgin is debauched, and adultery and fornication are committed behind the scenes. Swift.

To CUCKOLD. v. a.

1. To corrupt a man's wife; to bring upon a man the reproach of having an adulterous wife; to rob a man of his wife's fidelity.

If thou canst cuckold him, thou dost thyself a pleasure, and me a sport. Shaksp. Othello.

2. To wrong a husband by unchastity.

But suffer not thy wife abroad to roam;
Nor strut in streets with amazonian pace;
For that's to cuckold thee before thy face. Dryden.

CUCKOLDLY. adj. [from cuckold.] Having the qualities of a cuckold; poor; mean; cowardly; sneaking.

Foot cuckoldly knave, I know him not:
yet I wrong him to call him poor; they say the jealous knave hath masses of money. Shaksp.

CUCKOLDMAKER. n. f. [cuckold and make.] One that makes a practice of corrupting wives.

If I spared any that had a head to hit, either young or old, he or she, cuckold, or cuckoldmaker, let me never hope to see a chine again. Shaksp.
One Hernandus, cuckoldmaker of this city, contrived to steal her away. Dryden's Spanish Friar.

CUCKOLDOM. n. f. [from cuckold.]

1. The act of adultery.

She is thinking on nothing but her colonel, and conspiring cuckoldoms against me. Dryden.

2. The state of a cuckold.

It is a true saying, that the last man of the parish that knows of his cuckoldom, is himself. Arbutnot's John Bull.

CUCKOO. n. f. [cuculus, Lat. cuccoo, Welsh; cocu, French; cockoo, Dutch.]

1. A bird which appears in the spring, and is said to suck the eggs of other birds, and lay her own to be hatched in their place: from which practice, it was usual to alarm a husband, at the approach of an adulterer, by calling cuckoo; which, by mistake, was in time applied to the husband. This bird is remarkable for the uniformity of his note, from which his name in most tongues seems to have been formed.

CUD

Finding Mopsa, like a cuckoo by a nightingale, alone with Pamela, I came in. Sidney.

The merry cuckoo, messenger of spring,
His trumpet shrill hath thrice already sounded. Spenser.

The plaintive cuckoo gray,
Whose note full many a man doth mark,
And darts not answer, nay. Shakespeare.

Take heed, have open eye; for thieves do foot
by night:

Take heed, ere summer comes, or cuckoo birds
adright. Shakespeare.

I deduce,
From the first note the hollow cuckoo sings,
The symphony of spring; and touch a theme Unknown to fame, the passion of the grove. Tamson.

2. It is a name of contempt.

Why, what a shameful art thou, then, to praise him so for running!—A horseback, ye cuckoo;
—but a-foot, he will not burgle a foot. Shakj.

CUC'KOO-BUD. } n. f. [cardaminus, CUC'KOO-FLOWER. } Latin.] The name of a flower.

When daisies pied, and violets blue,
And cuckoo-buds of yellow hue,
Do paint the meadows much bedight. Shaksp.

Nettles, cuckoo flowers,
Dandel, and all the idle weeds. Shakespeare.

CUC'KOO-SPITTLE. n. f. [cuckoo and spittle.]

Cuckoo-spittle, or woodlice, is that spurious dew or exudation, or both, found upon plants, especially about the joints of lavender and rosemary; observable with us about the latter end of May. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CUC'ULLATE. } adj. [cucullatus, hooded, CUC'ULLATED. } Latin.]

1. Hooded; covered, as with a hood or cowl.

2. Having the resemblance or shape of a hood.

They are differently cucullated, and capuched upon the head and back. Brown's Vulg. Er.

CUCUMBER. n. f. [cucumis, Lat.] The name of a plant, and also of the fruit of that plant.

It hath a flower consisting of one single leaf, bell shaped, and expanded toward the top, and cut into many segments; of which some are male, or barren, having no embryo, but only a large style in the middle, charged with the farina:
others are female, or fruitful, being fastened to an embryo, which is afterwards changed into a fleshy fruit, for the most part oblong and turbinated, which is divided into three or four cells, inclosing many oblong seeds. The species are, 1. The common cucumber. 2. The white cucumber.

3. The long Turkey cucumber. Miller.

How cucumbers along the surface creep,
With crooked bodies and with bellies deep. Dryden's Virgil.

CUCURBITACEOUS. adj. [from cucurbita,
Latin, a gourd.]

Cucurbitaceous plants are those which resemble a gourd; such as the pumpkin and melon.

Chambers.

CUCURBITE. n. f. [cucurbita, Latin.] A chymical vessel, commonly called a body, made of earth or glass, in the shape of a gourd, and therefore called cucurbite.

Quincy.

I have, for curiosity's sake, distilled quick-silver in a cucurbite, fitted with a capacious glass head. Boyle on Colours.

Let common yellow sulphur be put into a cu-cubite glass, upon which pour the strongest aqua fortis. Mortimer.

CUD. n. f. [cud, Saxon.] That food which is repositied in the first stomach in order to rumination, or to be chewed again.

Many times, when my master's cattle came hither to chew their cud in this fresh place, I might see the young bull testify his love. Sidney.

CUE

You range the pathless wood,
While on a flow'ry bank he chews the cud. Dryd.

CUD'DEN. } n. f. [without etymology.]
CUD'DY. } A clown; a stupid rustic;
a low dolt: a low bad word.

The flustering cud'den, propp'd upon his staff,
Stood ready gaping with a grinning laugh. Dryd.

To CUD'DLE. v. n. [a low word, I believe, without etymology.] To lie close; to squat.

Have you mark'd a partridge quake,
Viewing the tower'd falcon nigh?

She cud'dles low behind the brake;
Nor would she stay, nor dare she fly. Prior.

CUD'GEL. n. f. [kudse, Dutch.]

1. A stick to strike with, lighter than a club, shorter than a pole.

Vine twigs, while they are green, are brittle;
yet the wood, dried, is extreme tough; and was used by the captains of armies, amongst the Romans, for their cudgels. Bacon.

Do not provoke the rage of stones
And cudgels to thy hide and bones:
Tremble and vanish. Hudibras.

Theats was quickly given to understand, with a good cudgel, the difference betwixt the one playfellow and the other. L'Estrange.

His furly officer ne'er fail'd to crack
His knotty cudgel on his tougher back. Dryden.

This, if well reflected on, would make people more wary in the use of the rod and the cudgel. Locke.

The wife Cornelius was convinced, that these being polemical arts, could no more be learned alone than fencing or cudgel playing. Arbuthnot.

2. To craft the CUDGELS, is to forbear the contest, from the practice of cudgelplayers to lay one over the other.

It is much better to give way, than it would be to contend at first, and then either to craft
the cudgels, or to be baffled in the conclusion. L'Estrange.

To CUD'GEL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To beat with a stick.

My lord, he speaks most vilely of you, like a soul-mouthed man as he is; and said he would cudgel you. Shakespeare's Henry v.

The ass courting his master, just as the spaniel had done, instead of being stroked and made much of, is only rated off and cudgelled for all his courtship. South.

Three duels he fought, thrice ventur'd his life;
Went home, and was cudgell'd again by his wife. Swift.

2. To beat in general.

Cudgel thy brains no more about it; for your dull ails will not mend his pace with beating. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

A good woman happened to pass by, as a company of young fellows were cudgelling a walnut-tree, and asked them what they did that for. L'Estrange.

CUDGEL-PROOF. adj. Able to resist a stick.

His doublet was of sturdy buff,
And though not word, yet cudgel-proof. Hudibras.

CUD'LE. n. f. A small sea fish.

Of round hilt there are britt, sprat, cudles, eels. Carew.

CUD'WARD. n. f. [from cud and ward.]

CUE. n. f. [queue, a tail, French.]

1. The tail or end of any thing: as, the long curl of a wig.

2. The last words of a speech, which the player, who is to answer, catches, and regards as intimation to begin.

Pyrampus, you begin: when you have spoken your speech, enter into that brake; and so every one according to his cue. Shakespeare.

CUF

3. A hint; an intimation; a short direction.

What's Hecuba to him, or he to Hecuba,
That he should weep for her? What would he do,
Had he the motive and the cue for passion That I have? He would drown the stage with tears. Shakespeare.

Let him know how many servants there are,
of both sexes, who expect vails; and give them their cue to attend in two lines, as he leaves the house. Swift.

4. The part which any man is to play in his turn.

Hold your hands,
Both you of my inclining, and the rest:
Were it my cue to fight, I should have known it Without a prompter. Shakespeare's Othello.

Neither is Otto here a much more taking gentleman: nothing appears in his cue to move pity, or any way make the audience of his party. Rymer's Tragedies of the last Age.

5. Humour; temper of mind: a low word.

CUE'RPO. n. f. [Spanish.] To be in cuerpo, is to be without the upper coat, or cloak, so as to discover the true shape of the cuerpo or body.

Expos'd in cuerpo to their rage,
Without my arms and equipage. Hudibras.

CUFF. n. f. [zuffa, a battle; zuffare, to fight, Italian.]

1. A blow with the fist; a box; a stroke.

The priest let fall the book,
And as he stoop'd again to take it up,
The mad-brain'd bridegroom took him such a cuff,
That down fell priest and book, and book and priest. Shakespeare.

There was no money bid for argument, unless the poet and the player went to cuffs in the question. Shakespeare.

He gave her a cuff on the ear, and she would prick him with her knitting-needle. Arbuthnot.

Their own tests, which now lie dormant, would be soon at cuffs again with each other about power and preferment. Swift.

2. It is used of birds that fight with their talons.

To CUFF. v. n. [from the noun.] To fight; to scuffle.

Clapping farces acted by the court,
While the peers cuff to make the noble figure. Dryden's Juvenal.

To CUFF. v. a.

1. To strike with the fist.

I'll after him again, and beat him. —
—Do, cuff him soundly; but never draw thy sword. Shaksp.

Were not you my friend, abused, and cuffed, and kicked? Congreve's Old Bachelor.

2. To strike with the talons.

Those lazy owls, who, perch'd near fortune's top,
Sit only watchful with their heavy wings
To cuff down new-fledg'd virtues, that would rise
To nobler heights, and make the grove harmonious. Orway.

The dizzard crow, that to the wood made wing,
With her loud kaws her craven kind does bring,
Who late in numbers, cuff the noble bird. Dryden.

They with their quills did all the hurt they could,
And cuff'd the tender chickens from their food. Dryden.

3. To strike with the wings. This seems improper.

Hovering about the coasts, they make their moan,
And cuff the cliffs with pinions not their own. Dryden's Amiel.

CUFF. n. f. [coiffe, French.] Part of the sleeve.

CUL

He tailed at tops; and, instead of the common fashion, he would visit his mistress in a morning gown, band, short cuffs, and a peaked beard.

CUNING. n. f. The making up of twine into such forms, as it is commonly framed into for carriage to other places.

CUIRASS. n. f. [cuirasse, Fr. from cuir, leather; coraccia, Ital.] A breastplate.

The lance pursued the voice without delay,
And pierc'd his cuirass, with such fury sent,
And sign'd his bosom with a purple dint.

CUIRASSIER. n. f. [from cuirass.] A man at arms; a soldier in armour.

The field, all iron, cast a gleaming brow,
Nor wanted clouds of foot, nor on each horn
Cuirassiers, all in steel, for standing fight.

The picture of St George, wherein he is depicted like a cuirassier, or horseman completely armed, is rather a symbolical image than any proper figure.

CUISSE. n. f. [cuisse, French.] The armour that covers the thighs.

I saw young Harry with his beaver on,
His cuisse on his thighs, gallantly arm'd,
Rise from the ground like feather'd Mercury.

The crosslet fume, and some the cuisse mould,
With silver plated, and with dusky gold.

But what had our author to wound Brutus with at a critical time? And how came the cuisse to be well tempered than the rest of his armour?

CULDEES. n. f. [colidei, Lat.] Monks in Scotland.

CULERAGE. n. f. The same plant with arje-smart.

CULINARY. adj. [culina, Latin.] Relating to the kitchen; relating to the art of cookery.

Great weight may condense those vapours and exhalations, as soon as they shall at any time begin to ascend from the sun, and make them presently fall back again into him, and by that action increase his heat; much after the manner that, in our earth, the air increases the heat of a culinary fire.

To those who, by reason of their northern exposure, will be still forced to be at the expense of culinary fires, it will reduce the price of their manufacture.

TO CULL. v. a. [cueillir, French.] To select from others; to pick out of many.

The best of every thing they had being cull'd out for themselves, if there were in their flocks any poor diseased thing not worth the keeping, they thought it good enough for the altar of God.

Our engines shall be bent
Against the brows of this retelling town:
Call for our choicest men of discipline,
To cull the plots of best advantage.

Like the bee culling from every flower,
Our thighs are pack'd with wax, our mouths with honey.

I do remember an apothecary
In tatter'd weeds, with overwhelming brows,
Culling of simples.

Then in a moment fortune that cull'd forth,
Out of one side, her happy minion,
The choicest of the British, the Roman, Saxon, and Norman laws, being cull'd, as it were, this grand charter was extracted.

When false flows of rhetoric thou wouldst
cull,

Trust nature, do not labour to be dull.
From his hand he culls,
For slaughter, four the fairest of his bulls.

When the current pieces of the time denomination are of different weight, then the traders

CUL

In money cull out the heavier, and melt them down with profit.

With humble duty, and officious haste,
I'll cull the farthest meat for thy repast.

The various off'rings of the world appear:
From each the nicely culls with curious toil,
And decks the goddess with the glittering spoil.

CULLER. n. f. [from cull.] One who picks or chooses.

CULLION. n. f. [caglione, a fool, Ital. or perhaps from scullion.] It seems to import meanness rather than folly. A scoundrel; a mean wretch.

Such a one as leaves a gentleman,
And makes a god of such a cullion.

Up to the breach, you dogs; advance, you cullions.

CULLIONLY. adj. [from cullion.] Having the qualities of a cullion; mean; base.

I'll make a sup o' th' moonshine of you: you whoreison, cullionly, barber-monger, draw.

CULLUMBINE. n. f. [more properly spelt COLUMBINE.] The flowers of this plant are beautifully variegated with blue, purple, red, and white.

Her goodly bosom, like a strawberry bed;
Her neck, like to a bunch of cullumbins.

CULLY. n. f. [caglione, Ital. a fool.] A man deceived or imposed upon; as by sharpeners, or a trumpeter.

Why should you, whose mother-wits
Are furnish'd with all perquisites,
B' allow'd to put all tricks upon
Our cully sex, and we use none?

Yet the rich cullies may their boasting spare:
They purchase but sophisticated ware.

He takes it in mighty dudgeon, because I won't let him make me over by deed as his lawful cully.

TO CULLY. v. a. [from the noun.] To be fool; to cheat; to trick; to deceive; to impose upon.

CULMIFEROUS. adj. [culmus, and fero, Latin.]

Culmiferous plants are such as have a smooth jointed stalk, and usually hollow; and at each joint the stalk is wrapped about with single, narrow, long, sharp-pointed leaves, and their seeds are contained in chaffy husks.

There are also several sorts of grasses, both of the Cyprus and culmiferous kind; some with broader, others with narrower leaves.

The properest food of the vegetable kingdom is taken from the farinaceous or meaty seeds of some culmiferous plants; as oats, barley, wheat, rice, rye, maize, panic, millet.

TO CULMINATE. v. n. [culmen, Lat.] To be vertical; to be in the meridian.

Far and wide his eye commands:
For sight no obstacle found here, or shade,
But all sunshine; as when his beams at noon
Culminate from th' equator.

CULMINATION. n. f. [from culminate.] The transit of a planet through the meridian.

CULPABILITY. n. f. [from culpable.] Blamableness.

CULPABLE. adj. [culpabilis, Latin.]

1. Criminal.

Proceed no slower 'gainst our uncle Gloucester,
Than from true evidence of good esteem
He be approv'd in practice culpable.

2. Guilty; with of.

These being perhaps culpable of this crime, or favourers of their friends.

3. Blamable; blameworthy.

The wisdom of God setteth before us in Scripture so many admirable patterns of virtue, and no one of them without somewhat noted wherein they were culpable; to the end that to Him alone it might always be acknowledged, Thou only art holy, Thou only art just.

CUL

All such ignorance is voluntary, and therefore culpable; forasmuch as it was in every man's power to have prevented it.

CULPABLENESS. n. f. [from culpable.] Blame; guilt.

CULPABLY. adv. [from culpable.] Blamably; criminally.

If we perform this duty piously and culpably, it is not to be expected we should communicate holily.

CULPRIT. n. f. [about this word there is great dispute. It is used by the judge at criminal trials, who, when the prisoner declares himself not guilty, and puts himself upon his trial, answers, Culprit, God send thee a good deliverance. It is likely that it is a corruption of Qu'il paroit, May it so appear; the wish of the judge being that the prisoner may be found innocent.] A man arraigned before his judge.

The knight appear'd, and silence they proclaim;
Then first the culprit answer'd to his name;
And, after forms of law, was last requir'd
To name the thing that woman most desir'd.

An author is in the condition of a culprit; the public are his judges: by allowing too much, and contending too far, he may injure his own cause; and, by pleading and asserting too boldly, he may displease the court.

CULTER. n. f. [culter, Latin.] The iron of the plough perpendicular to the share. It is commonly written coulter.

Her fallow less
The darnel, hemlock, and rank fumitory,
Doth rust upon; while that the culter runs
That should deracinate such savagery.

TO CULTIVATE. v. a. [cultiver, Fr.] 1. To forward or improve the product of the earth by manual industry.

Those excellent seeds implanted in your birth, will, if cultivated, be most flourishing in production; and, as the soil is good, and no cult nor care wanting to improve it, we must entertain hopes of the richest harvest.

2. To improve; to meliorate.

We're but less indulgent to our faults,
And patience had to cultivate our thoughts,
Our muse would flourish.

To make man mild and sociable to man,
To cultivate the wild licentious savage
With wisdom, discipline, and liberal arts,
Th' embellishments of life.

CULTIVATION. n. f. [from cultivate.]

1. The art or practice of improving soils, and forwarding or meliorating vegetables.

2. Improvement in general; promotion; melioration.

An innate light discovers the common notions of good and evil, which, by cultivation and improvement, may be advanced to higher and brighter discoveries.

A foundation of good sense, and a cultivation of learning, are required to give a seasoning to retirement, and make us taste the blessing.

CULTIVATOR. n. f. [from cultivat.] One who improves, promotes, or meliorates; or endeavours to forward any vegetable product, or any thing else capable of improvement.

It has been lately complained of, by some cultivators of clover-grass, that from a great quantity of the seed not any grass springs up.

CULTURE. n. f. [cultura, Latin.]

1. The act of cultivation; the act of tilling the ground; tillage.

Give us feed unto our heart, and culture to our understandings, that there may come fruit of it. 2 Edras.

These three last were slower than the ordinary wheat of itself, and this culture did rather retard than advance. Bacon.

The plough was not invented till after the deluge; the earth requiring little or no care or culture, but yielding its increase freely, and without labour and toil. Woodward.

Where grows?—Where grows it not? If vain our toil,

We ought to blame the culture, not the soil. Fix'd to no spot is happiness sincere. Pope.

They rose as vigorous as the sun; Then to the culture of the willing glebe. Thomson.

2. Art of improvement and melioration.

One might wear any passion out of a family by culture, as skilful gardeners blot a colour out of a tulip that hurts its beauty. Taylor.

To CULTURE. v. a. [from the noun.]

To cultivate; to manure; to till. It is used by Thomson, but without authority.

CULVER. n. f. [columba, Lat. culpe, Sax.] A pigeon. An old word.

Had he so done, he had him snatch'd away, More light than culver in the falcon's bill. Spenser.

Whence, borne on liquid wing, The founding culver shoots. Thomson's Spring.

CULVERIN. n. f. [coluberine, French.]

A species of ordnance: originally a hawk.

A whole cannon requires, for every charge, forty pounds of powder, and a bullet of sixty-four pounds; a culverin, sixteen pounds of powder, and a bullet of nineteen pounds; a demi-culverin, nine pounds of powder, and a bullet of twelve pounds. Widdius's Math. Magic.

Here a well polish'd mall gives us the joy To see our princely matchless force employ: No sooner has he touch'd the flying ball, But 'tis already more than half the mall; And such a fury from his arm 't has got, As from a smoking culverin 'twere shot. Waller.

CULVERKEY. n. f. A flower.

Looking down the meadows I could see a girl cropping culverkeys and cowslips, to make garlands. Walter's Angler.

To CUMBER. v. a. [commeren, kombere, to disturb, Dutch.]

1. To embarrass; to entangle; to obstruct.

Why asks he what avails him not in fight, And would but cumber and retard his sight, In which his only excellence is plac'd? You give him death that intercept his haste. Dryden's Fables.

Hardly his head the plunging pilot rears, Clogg'd with his cloaths, and cumber'd with his years. Dryden.

The learning and mastery of a tongue, being uneasy and un-pleasant enough in itself, should not be cumber'd with any other difficulties, as is done in this way of proceeding. Lacke.

2. To crowd or load with something useless.

Let it not cumber your better remembrance. Shakespeare's Timon.

The multiplying variety of arguments, especially frivolous ones, is not only lost labour, but cumbers the memory to no purpose. Lacke.

3. To involve in difficulties and dangers; to distress.

Domestic fury, and fierce civil strife, Shall cumber all the parts of Italy. Shaks.

VOL. I.

4. To busy; to distract with multiplicity of cares.

Martina was cumber'd about much serving. Luke.

5. To be troublesome in any place.

Doth the bramble cumber a garden? It makes the better hedge; where, if it chancous to prick the owner, it will tear the thief. Grew.

CUMBER. n. f. [komber, Dutch.] Vexation; burdensomeness; embarrassment; obstruction; hinderance; disturbance; distress.

By the occasion thereof I was brought to as great cumber and danger, as lightly any might escape. Sidney.

Thus fade thy helps, and thus thy cumbers spring. Spenser.

The greatest ships are least serviceable, go very deep in water, are of marvellous charge and fearful cumber. Raleigh.

CUMBERSOME. adj. [from cumber.]

he not grown rich by it ? Let him have your custom, but not your votes.

Addison.

5. Application from buyers : as, this trader has good custom.

6. [In law.]

A law or right not written, which, being established by long use, and the consent of our ancestors, has been, and is, daily practised. We cannot say that this or that is a custom, except we can justify that it hath continued so one hundred years ; yet, because that is hard to prove, it is enough for the proof of a custom, if two or more can depose that they heard their fathers say, that it was a custom all their time ; and that their fathers heard their fathers also say, that it was likewise a custom in their time. If it is to be proved by record, the continuance of a hundred years will serve. Custom is either general or particular : general, that which is current through England ; particular, is that which belongs to this or that county ; as gavelkind to Kent, or this or that lordship, city, or town. Custom differs from prescription ; for custom is particular to this or that man : prescription may be for a far shorter time than custom.

Cowell.

7. Tribute ; tax paid for goods imported or exported.

The residue of these ordinary finances be casual or uncertain, as be the escheats and forfei-tures, the customs, butlerage, and imposts.

Bacon.

of God's name, by cursing, or customary swearing ;
and take heed of the neglect of his worship, or any thing belonging to it.

Titian.

3. Usual ; wonted.

Ev'n now I met him
With customary compliment, when he,
Waiving his eyes to th' contrary, and falling
A lip of much contempt, speeds from me.

Shakespeare.

CUSTOMED. adj. [from custom.] Usual ;
common ; that to which we are accustomed.

No nat'ral exhalation in the sky,
No common wind, no customed event,
But they will pluck away its nat'ral cause,
And call them meteors, prodigies, and signs.

Shakespeare.

1. One who frequents any place of sale for the sake of purchasing.

One would think it Overdone's house ; for here be many old customers.

Shakespeare.

A wealthy poet takes more pains to hire
A flattering audience, than poor tradesmen do
To persuade customers to buy their goods.

Ref. common.

Lord Strut has bespoke his liveries at Lew-Baboon's shop : Don't you see how that old fox steals away your customers, and turns you out of your business every day ?

Arbutnot.

Those papers are grown a necessary part in coffeehouse furniture, and may be read by customers of all ranks for curiosity or amusement.

Swift.

I shewed you a piece of black and white stuff, just sent from the dyer, which you were pleased to approve of, and be my customer for.

Swift.

2. A common woman. This sense is now obsolete.

I marry her !—What, a customer ? Pr'ythee bear some charity to my wit ; do not think it to unwholesome.

Shakespeare's Othello.

CUT. n. f.

1. A buckler-bearer.

Ainsworth.

To CUT, pret. cut ; part. pass. cut. [probably from the French couteau, a knife.]

1. To penetrate with an edged instrument ; to divide any continuity by a sharp edge.

Ah, cut my lace asunder,
That my great heart may have some scope to beat,

Or else I swoon with this dead killing news.

Shakespeare's Richard III.

And when two hearts were join'd by mutual love,

The sword of justice cuts upon the knot,
And severs 'em for ever.

Dryden.

Some I have cut away with scissars.

Wijeman.

2. To hew.

Thy servants can skill to cut timber in Lebanon.

Chronicles.

3. To carve ; to make by sculpture.

Why should a man, whose blood is warm within,

Sit like his grandfire cut in alabaster ?

Shak.

The triumphal is defaced by time ; but the plan of it is neatly cut upon the wall of a neighbouring building.

Addison.

4. To form any thing by cutting.

And they did beat the gold into thin plates,
and cut it into wires.

Exodus.

5. To divide by passing through.

Before the whistling winds the vessels fly,
With rapid swiftness cut the liquid way,
And reach Ceresus at the point of day.

Pope.

6. To pierce with any uneasy sensation.

The man was cut to the heart with their consolation.

Addison.

CUT

7. To divide packs of cards.

Supine they in their heav'n remain,
Exempt from passion and from pain;
And frankly leave us, human elves,
To cut and shuffle for our ourselves. Prior.
We sure in vain the cards condemn,
Ourselves both cut and shuffled them. Prior.
Take a fresh pack, nor is it worth our griev-
ing,
Who cuts or shuffles with our dirty leaving. Granville.

It is no grace to a judge to shew quickness of conceit in cutting off evidence or counsel too short. Bacon.

19. To CUT off. To apostrophise; to abbreviate.

No vowel can be cut off before another, when we cannot sink the pronunciation of it. Dryden.

20. To CUT out. To shape; to form.

By the pattern of mine own thought. I cut out The purity of his. Shakspeare.

I, for my part, do not like images cut out in juniper, or other garden stuff: they be for children. Bacon.

There is a large table at Montmorancy cut out of the thickness of a vine stock. Temple.

The antiquaries being but indifferent taylorers, they wrangle prodigiously about the cutting out the toga. Arbutnot on Coins.

They have a large forest cut out into walks, extremely thick and gloomy. Addison.

21. To CUT out. To scheme; to contrive.

Having a most pernicious fire kindled within the very bowels of his own forest, he had work enough cut him out to extinguish it. Howell.

Every man had cut out a place for himself in his own thoughts: I could reckon up in our army two or three lord-treasurers. Addison.

22. To CUT out. To adapt.

You know I am not cut out for writing a treatise, nor have a genius to pen any thing exactly. Rymer.

23. To CUT out. To debar.

I am cut out from any thing but common acknowledgments, or common discourse. Pope.

24. To CUT out. To excel; to outdo.

25. To CUT short. To hinder from proceeding by sudden interruption.

Thus much he spoke, and more he would have said,
But the stern horn turn'd aside his head,
And cut him short. Dryden's Æneid.

Acquiesce him short; and thus replied,
My worth, allow'd in words, is in effect denied. Dryden.

26. To CUT short. To abridge: as, the soldiers were cut short of their pay.

The soldier's intemperance, and the note upon him afterwards, on the cutting him up, that he had no brains in his head, may be mortified into a sensual man. L'Estrange.

27. To CUT up. To divide an animal into convenient pieces.

The bear's intemperance, and the note upon him afterwards, on the cutting him up, that he had no brains in his head, may be mortified into a sensual man. L'Estrange.

Sets of phrases, cut and dry,
Eschmore thy tongue supply. Swift.

Cut. n. f. [from the verb.]

CUT

1. The action of a sharp or edged instrument; the blow of an ax or sword.

2. The impression or separation of continuity, made by an edge or sharp instrument: distinguished from that made by perforation with a pointed instrument.

3. A wound made by cutting.

Sharp weapons, according to the force, cut into the bone many ways; which cuts are called scides, and are reckoned among the fractures. Wise man's Surgery.

4. A channel made by art.

This great cut or ditch Sciostris the rich king of Egypt, and long after him Ptolemæus Philadelphus, purposed to have made a great deal wider and deeper, and thereby to have let the Red Sea into the Mediterranean. Swaltes.

5. A part cut off from the rest.

Suppose a board to be ten foot long, and one broad, one cut is reckoned for many foot. Mortimer's Husbandry.

6. A small particle; a shred.

It hath a number of short cuts: or shreadings, which may be better called wilches than prayers. Hooker.

7. A lot made by cutting a flick.

My lady Zelmane and my daughter Mopsa may draw cuts, and the shortest cut speak first. Sidney.

A man may as reasonably draw cuts for his tenets, and regulate his persuasion by the cast of a die. Locke.

8. A near passage, by which some angle is cut off.

The ignorant took heart to enter upon this great cutting, and instead of their cutting their way to it through the knowledge of the tongues, the fathers, and councils, they have taken another and a shorter cut. South.
There is a shorter cut, an easier passage. Decay of Piety.

The evidence of my sense is simple and immediate, and therefore I have but a shorter cut thereby to the assent to the truth of the things so evidenced. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

But the gentleman would needs see me part of my way, and carry me a short cut through his own ground, which saved me half a mile's riding. Swift's Examiner.

9. A picture cut or carved upon wood or copper, and impressed from it.

In this form, according to his description, he is set forth in the prints or cuts of martyrs by Cevalierius. Brown.

It is, I believe, used improperly by Addison.

Madam Dacier, from some old cuts of Terence, fancies that the larva or persona of the Roman actors was not only a vizard for the face, but had false hair to it. Addison on Italy.

10. The stamp on which a picture is carved, and by which it is impressed.

11. The act or practice of dividing a pack of cards.

How can the muse her aid impart,
Unkill'd in all the terms of art?
Or in harmonious numbers put
The deal, the shuffle, and the cut? Swift.

12. Fashion; form; shape; manner of cutting into shape.

Their clothes are after such a pagan cut too,
That, sure, they've worn out christendom. Shakspeare's Henry VIII.

His tawny beard was th' equal grace
Both of his wisdom and his face;
In cut and dye to like a tile,

A sudden view it would beguile. Hudibras.

They were so familiarly acquainted with him,
as to know the very cut of his beard. Stillingfleet.

CUT

CUT

Children love breeches, not for their cut on ease, but because the having them is a mark or step towards manhood. Locke.

A third desires you to observe well the toga on such a reverie, and asks you whether you can in confidence believe the sleeve of it to be of the true Roman cut. Addison.

Sometimes an old fellow shall wear this or that sort of cut in his cloaths with great integrity. Addison's Spectator.

Wilt thou buy there some high heads of the newest cut for my daughter? Arbutnot's J. Bull.

13. It seems anciently to have signified a fool or cully. To cut still signifies to cheat, in low language.

Send her money, knight: if thou hast her not in the end, call me cut. Shak. Twelfth Night.

14. CUT and long tail. A proverbial expression for men of all kinds. It is borrowed from dogs.

He will maintain you like a gentlewoman.—Ay, that I will, come cut and long tail, under the degree of a squire. Shakespeare.

At quintin he,
In honour of this bridegroom,
Hath challeng'd either wide countess;
Come cut and long tail; for there he Six bachelors as bold as he. Ben Jonson.

CUTANEOUS. adj. [from cutis, Latin.]
Relating to the skin.

This serous, nutritious mass is more readily circulated into the cutaneous or remotest parts of the body. Fluor on Humours.

Some sorts of cutaneous eruptions are occasioned by feeding much on acid unripe fruits and farinaceous substances. Arbutnot.

CUTICLE. n. f. [cuticula, Latin.]

1. The first and outermost covering of the body, commonly called the scarf-skin. This is that soft skin which rises in a blister upon any burning, or the application of a blistering plaster. It sticks close to the surface of the true skin, to which it is also tied by the vessels which nourish it, though they are so small as not to be seen. When the scarf-skin is examined with a microscope, it appears to be made up of several lays of exceeding small scales. Quincy.

In each of the very fingers there are bones and gristles, and ligaments and membranes, and muscles and tendons, and nerves and arteries, and veins and skin, and cuticle and nail. Bentley.

2. A thin skin formed on the surface of any liquor.

When any saline liquor is evaporated to cuticle, and let cool, the salt concretes in regular figures; which argues that the particles of the salt, before they concreted, floated in the liquor at equal distances in rank and file. Newton's Opticks.

CUTICULAR. adj. [from cutis, Latin.]
Belonging to the skin.

CUTH, signifies knowledge or skill. So Cuthwin is a knowing conqueror; Cuthred, a knowing counsellor; Cuthbert, famous for skill. Much of the same nature are Sophocles and Sorbianus. Gibson's Camden.

CUTLASS. n. f. [cutelas, French. This word is written sometimes cutlace, sometimes cutleax; in Shakespeare, cutleaxe; and in Pope, cutlax.] A broad cutting sword: the word is much in use among the seamen.

VOL. I.

Were 't not better

That I did suit me all points like a man?
A gallant cutleaxe upon my thigh,
A boar-spear in my hand. Shak. As you like it.
To the lodgments of his herd he run,
Where the fat porkers slept beneath the sun;
Of two his cutlax launch'd the spouting blood,
These quarters'd, sing'd, and fix'd on forks of wood. Pope.

CUTLER. n. f. [couteleur, French.] One who makes or sells knives.

A poultry ring
That she did give, whole poetry was
For all the world like cutlers poetry
Upon a knife; love me, and leave me not. Shakespeare.

In a bye cutler's shop he bought a tenpenny knife: so cheap was the instrument of this great attempt. Wotton.

He chose no other instrument than an ordinary knife, which he bought of a common cutler. Clarendon.

CUTPURSE. n. f. [cut and purse.] One who steals by the method of cutting purses: a common practice when men wore their purses at their girdles, as was once the custom. A thief; a robber.

To have an open ear, a quick eye, and a nimble hand, is necessary for a cutpurse. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

A vice of kings,
A cutpurse of the empire and the rule,
That from a thief the precious diadem stole,
And put it in his pocket. Shaksp. Hamlet.

Was there no felony, no bowd,
Cutpurse, nor burglary abroad?
If we could imagine a whole nation to be cutpurse and robbers, would there then be kept that square dealing and equity in such a monstrous den of thieves? Bentley's Sermons.

CUTTER. n. f. [from cut.]

1. An agent or instrument that cuts any thing.

2. A nimble boat that cuts the water.

3. [incisores.] The teeth that cut the meat.

The molars, or grinders, are behind, nearest the centre of motion, because there is a greater strength or force required to chew the meat than to bite a piece; and the cutters before, that they may be ready to cut off a morsel from any solid food, to be transmitted to the grinders. Ray on the Creation.

4. An officer in the Exchequer that provides wood for the tallies, and cuts the sum paid upon them; and then casts the same into the court to be written upon. Cowell.

CUT-THROAT. n. f. [cut and throat.] A ruffian; a murderer; a butcher of men; an assassin.

Will you then suffer these robbers, cut-throats, hate people, gathered out of all the corners of Christendom, to waste your countries, spoil your cities, murder your people, and trouble all your seas? Knolles.

Perhaps the cut-throat may rather take his copy from the Parisian massacre, one of the horridlest instances of barbarous inhumanity that ever was known. South.

The ruffian robbers by no justice aw'd,
And unpaid cut-throat soldiers, are abroad;
Those venal souls, who, harden'd in each ill,
To save complaints and prosecution, kill. Dryd.

CUT-THROAT. adj. Cruel; inhuman; barbarous.

If to take above fifty in the hundred be extremity, this in truth can be none other than cut-throat and abominable dealing. Carew's Survey.

CUTTING. n. f. [from cut.] A piece cut off; a chop.

The burning of the cuttings of vines, and casting them upon land, doth much good. Tasso.

Many are propagated above ground, by slips or cuttings. Ray.

CUTTLE. n. f. [sepia.] A fish, which, when he is pursued by a fish of prey, throws out a black liquor, by which he darkens the water and escapes.

It is somewhat strange, that the blood of all birds, and beasts, and fishes, should be of a red colour, and only the blood of the cuttle should be as black as ink. Bacon.

He that uses many words for the explaining any subject, doth, like the cuttle fish, hide himself for the most part in his own ink. Ray.

CUTTLE. n. f. [from cuttle.] A foul-mouthed fellow; a fellow who blackens the character of others. Hammer.

Away, you cutpurse rascal; you filthy bung, away; by this wine I'll thrust my knife in your mouldy chops, if you play the saucy cuttle with me. Shak. Henry IV.

CYCLE. n. f. [fyclus, Latin; $\kappa\acute{\iota}\kappa\lambda\omicron\varsigma$.]

1. A circle.

2. A round of time; a space in which the same revolutions begin again; a periodical space of time.

We do more commonly use these words, so as to stile a lesser space a cycle, and a greater by the name of period; and you may not improperly call the beginning of a large period the epocha thereof. Holden on Time.

3. A method, or account of a method, continued till the same course begins again.

We thought we should not attempt an unacceptable work, if here we endeavoured to present our gardeners with a complete cycle of what is requisite to be done throughout every month of the year. Evelyn's Calendar.

4. Imaginary orbs; a circle in the heavens.

How build, unbuild, contrive
To save appearances; how gird the sphere
With centrick and excentrick, scribbled o'er Cycle and epicycle, orb in orb! Milton.

CYCLOID. n. f. [from $\kappa\upsilon\kappa\lambda\omicron\iota\delta\omicron\varsigma$, of $\kappa\upsilon\kappa\lambda\omicron\varsigma$ and $\tau\acute{\iota}\delta\omicron\varsigma$, shape.] A geometrical curve, of which the genesis may be conceived by imagining a nail in the circumference of a wheel: the line which the nail describes in the air, while the wheel revolves in a right line, is the cycloid.

CYCLOIDAL. adj. [from cycloid.] Relating to a cycloid; as the cycloidal space, is the space contained between the cycloid and its substance. Chambers.

CYCLOPEDIA. n. f. [$\kappa\upsilon\kappa\lambda\omicron\varsigma$ and $\tau\omicron\upsilon\delta\iota\alpha$.] A circle of knowledge; a course of the sciences.

CYGNET. n. f. [from cycnus, Latin.] A young swan.

I am the cygnet to this pale faint swan,
Who chaunts a doleful hymn to his own death. Shak. King John.

So doth the swan her downy cygnets save,
Keeping them prisoners underneath her wings. Shak. Henry VI.

Cygnets from grey, turn white. Bacon.
Young cygnets are good meat, if fatt'd with oats; but fed with weeds they taste fishy. Motimer's Husbandry.

CYLINDER. n. f. [$\kappa\acute{\iota}\lambda\iota\delta\omicron\rho\omicron\varsigma$.] A body having two flat surfaces and one circular.

C Y N

The quantity of water which every revolution does carry, according to any inclination of the cylinder, may be easily found. Wilkins.

The square will make you ready for all manner of compartments, bafes, pedestals, plots, and buildings; your cylinder, for vaulted turrets, and round buildings. Peacham.

CYLINDRICAL. } adj. [from cylinder.]
CYLINDRICK. } Partaking of the nature of a cylinder; having the form of a cylinder.

Minera feri stalactitis, when several of the cylindrick striz are contiguous, and grow together into one theaf, is called brushiron ore. Woodw.

Obstructions must be most incident to such parts of the body where the circulation and the elastick fibres are both smallest, and those glands which are the extremities of arteries formed into cylindrick canals. Arbuthnot.

CYMAR. n. f. [properly written finar.] A slight covering; a scarf.

Her comely limbs compos'd with decent care,
Her body shaded with a slight cymar,
Her bosom to the view was only bare. Dryden.

CYMATIUM. n. f. [Lat. from κύματιον, a little wave.] A member of architecture, whereof one half is convex, and the other concave. There are two sorts, of which one is hollow below, as the other is above. Harris.

In a cornice, the gola, or cymatium of the corona, the coping, the modillions, or dentelli, make a noble show by their graceful projections. Spectator.

CYMBAL. n. f. [cymbalum, Latin.] A musical instrument.

The trumpets, sackbuts, psalteries and fifes,
Tabors and cymbals, and the shouting Romans,
Make the fun dance. Shaksp. Coriolanus.

If mirth should fail, I'll busy her with cares,
Silence her clamorous voice with louder wars;
Trumpets and drums shall fright her from the throne,

As sounding cymbals aid the lab'ring moon. Dryden's Aurengzebe.

CYNA'NTHROPY. n. f. [κύνων, κύων, and άνθρωπος.] A species of madness in which men have the qualities of dogs.

C Y P

CYNARCTOMACHY. [κύνων, αεττις, μάχη.] A word coined by Butler, to denote bear-baiting with a dog.

That some occult design doth lie
In bloody cynarctomachy,
Is plain enough to him that knows
How saints lead brothers by the nose. Hudibras.

CYNEGETICKS. n. f. [κύνων, τέχνη.] The art of hunting; the art of training and hunting with dogs.

There are extant, in Greek, four books of cynegeticks, or venation. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CY'NICAL. } adj. [κύνων.] Having the CY'NICK. } qualities of a dog; currish; brutal; snarling; satirical.

He doth believe that some new-fangled wit, (it is his cynical phrase) will some time or other find out his art. Wilkins.

CY'NICK. n. f. [κύνων.] A philosopher of the snarling or currish sort; a follower of Diogenes; a rude man; a snarler; a misanthrope.

How vilitly doth this cynick rhyme!—
Get you hence, firrah: saucy fellow, hence. Shakspere.

Without these precautions the man degenerates into a cynick, the woman into a coquette; the man grows sullen and morose, the woman impertinent and fantastical. Addison.

CY'NOSURE. n. f. [from κύνων, σῦρα.] The star near the north pole, by which sailors steer.

Towers and battlements it sees Bosom'd high, in tufted trees,
Where perhaps some beauty lies,
The cynosure of neighbouring eyes. Milton.

CY'ON. See Crown.
Gather ye now for garbs before the buds sprout. Evelyn.

CY'PRESS-TREE. n. f. [cypressus, Latin.]
1. The cypress is a tall straight tree, produced with great difficulty. Its fruit is of no use; its leaves are bitter, and the very smell and shade of it are dangerous. Hence the Romans looked upon it to be a fatal tree, and made use of it at funerals, and in mournful ceremonies.

C Z A

The cypress-tree is always green, and never either rots or is worm-eaten. Calmet.

In ivory coffers I have stuf't my crowns;
In cypress chests my arras counterpanes. Shak.
He taketh the cypress and the oak, which he strengtheneth for himself among the trees of the forest. Isaiah.

Poplars and alders ever quivering play'd,
And nodding cypress form'd a fragrant shade. Pope's Odyssey.

2. Being anciently used in funerals, it is the emblem of mourning.

Poison be their drink,
Their sweetest shade a grove of cypress trees. Shak. Henry vi.

CY'PAUS. n. f. [I suppose from the place where it was made; or corruptly from cypress, as being used in mourning.] A thin transparent black stuff.

Lawn as white as driven snow,
Cyprius black as e'er was crow. Shakspere.
A cyprius, not a bosom,
Hides my poor heart! Shakspere.

CYST. } n. f. [κύστις.] A bag contain-CYSTIS. } ing some morbid matter.

In taking it out, the cystis broke, and shewed itself by its matter to be a meliceris. Wiseman.

There may be a consumption, with a purulent spitting, when the vomica is contained in a cyst or bag; upon the breaking of which the patient is commonly suffocated. Arbuthnot on Diet.

CY'STICK. adj. [from cyst, a bag.] Contained in a bag.

The bile is of two sorts: the cystick, or that contained in the gall-bladder, a sort of repository for the gall; or the hepatick, or what flows immediately from the liver. Arbuthnot.

CYSTOTOMY. n. f. [κύστις and τομή.] The act or practice of opening encysted tumours, or cutting the bag in which any morbid matter is contained.

CZAR. n. f. [a Slavonian word, written more properly tsar.] The title of the emperor of Russia.

CZARINA. n. f. [from czar.] The empress of Russia.

D.

D A

DAB-CHICK. n. f. [colymbus.] a small waterfowl, called likewise dobchick, and didapper, and dipchick. Ray.

A dab-chick waddles through the copse
On feet and wings, and does, and wades, and hops. Pope.

To DA'BBLE. v. a. [dabbelen, Dutch.]

To smear; to daub; to sputter; to besprinkle; to wet.

A shadow like an angel with bright hair

Dabbled in blood. Shakespeare's Richard III.

I testified, and dabbled the wound with oil of turpentine. Whifman's Surgery.

Mean while the South, rising with dabbled wings,

A sable cloud athwart the welkin flings. Swift.

To DA'BBLE. v. n.

1. To play in water; to move in water or mud.

Neither will a spirit, that dwells with Aars, dabble in this impure mud. Glavinille's Epol.

The little one complained of her legs, that she could neither swim nor dabble with them. L'Estrange.

But when he found the boys at play, And saw them dabbling in their clay,

He stood behind a stall to lurk,

And mark the progress of their work. Swift.

2. To do any thing in a slight, superficial, or shallow manner; to tamper.

Shakespeare shall be put into your hands, as clear and as fair as it came out of them; though you, I think, have been dabbling here and there with the text, I have had more reverence for the writer and the printer, and left every thing standing. Attobury to Pope.

DA'BBLER. n. f. [from dabble.]

1. One that plays in water.

2. One that meddles without mastery; one that never goes to the bottom of an affair; a superficial meddler.

He dares not complain of the tooth-ach, lest our dabblers in politics should be ready to wear against him for dissatisfaction. Swift.

DACE. n. f. [of uncertain derivation; in most provinces called dare. Leuciscus.]

A small river fish, resembling a roach, but less.

Let me live harmlessly, and near the brink

Of Trent or Avon have a dwelling place;

Where I may see my quill or cork down sink,

With eager bite of perch, or bleak, or dace. Walton.

DA'CTYLE. n. f. [δακτυλος, a finger.] A poetical foot consisting of one long syllable and two short, like the joints of a finger: as, cāndīlūs.

DAD. } n. f. [The child's way of DA'DDY. } expressing father. It is remarkable, that, in all parts of the world, the word for father, as first taught to children, is compounded of a

and t, or the kindred letter d, differently placed; as tad, Welsh; at, Greek; atta, Gothic; tata, Latin.]

Father.

I was never so bethumped with words, Since first I call'd my brother's father dad. Shakespeare.

His loving mother left him to my care; Fine child, as like his dad as he could stare! Gay.

To DADE. v. a. To hold up by a leading string.

The little children when they learn to go, By painful mothers daded to and fro. Drayton.

DÆDAL. adj. [dadalus, Latin.]

Nor hath The dadal hand of Nature only pour'd Her gifts of outward grace. Philips.

DA'FODIL.

DAFFODILLY.

phodelus.]

This plant hath a lily-flower, consisting of one leaf, which is bell-shaped, and cut into six segments, which inclose its middle like a crown; but the empalement, which commonly rises out of a membranous vagina, turns to an oblong or roundish fruit, which is triangular, and gapes in three parts; is divided into three cells, and full of roundish seeds. Miller.

Strew me the green ground with daffodown-dillies.

And cowslips, and kingcups, and loved lilies. Spenser.

Bid amaranthus all his beauty shed, And daffodillies fill their cups with tears, To strew the laureat heath where Lycid lies. Milton.

The daughters of the flood have search'd the mead

For violets pale, and cropp'd the poppy's head:

The short narcissus, and fair daffodil,

Pancies to please the sight, and caltia sweet to smell. Dryden.

To DAFT. v. a. [contracted from do aft; that is, to throw back, to throw off.]

To toss aside; to put away with contempt; to throw away slightly. Not in use.

The nimble-footed mad-cap prince of Wales, And his comrades, that daft the world aside,

And bid it pass. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

I would he had bellow'd this dotage on me; I would have daft all other respects, and made her half myself. Shakespeare.

DAG. n. f. [dague, French.]

1. A dagger.

2. A hand-gun; a pistol: so called from serving the purposes of a dagger, being carried secretly, and doing mischief suddenly. It is in neither sense now used.

5. Ceremoniousness; scrupulosity.

DA'INTY. adj. [derived by Skinner from dain, an old French word for delicate; which yet I cannot find in dictionaries.]

1. Pleasing to the palate; of exquisite taste; delicious.

Higher concoction is required for sweetness, or pleasure of taste, and therefore all your dainty plumbs are a little dry. Bacon.

2. Delicate; of acute sensibility; nice; squeamish; soft; luxurious; tender.

This is the softest, yet the daintiest sense; For even the ears of such as have no skill Perceive a discord, and conceive offence; And knowing not what's good, yet find the ill. Dante.

They were a fine and dainty people; frugal and yet elegant, though not military. Bacon.

3. Scrupulous; ceremonious.

D A I

- Which of you all Will now deny to dance? She that makes dainty,
I'll swear hath corns. Shakspeare Romeo and Juliet.
Therefore to horse;
And let us not be dainty of leave-taking,
But thistaway. Shakspeare's Macbeth.
4. Elegant; tenderly, languishingly, or effeminately beautiful.

My house, within the city,
Is richly furnished with plate and gold,
Basons and ewers to lave her dainty hands.
Shakspeare.

Your dainty speakers have the curie,
To plead bad causes down to worse. Prior.

DA'INTY. n. f.

1. Something nice or delicate; a delicacy; something of exquisite taste.
Be not desirous of his dainties; for they are deceitful meat. Proverbs.
A worm breedeth in meal, of the shape of a large white maggot, which is given as a great dainty to nightingales. Bacon.

She then produc'd her dairy store,
And unbought dainties of the poor.
The shepherd swains, with sure abundance
blest,
On the fat flock and rural dainties feast. Pope.

2. A word of fondness formerly in use.
Why that 's my dainty; I shall miss thee;
But yet thou shalt have freedom. Shakspeare.
There is a fortune coming Towards you, dainty, that will take thee thus,
And set thee aloft. Ben Jonson.

DA'IRY. n. f. [from dey, an old word for milk. Mr. Lye.]

1. The occupation or art of making various kinds of food from milk.
Grounds were tused much in England either to feeding or dairy; and this advanced the trade of English butter. Temple.

2. The place where milk is manufactured.
You have no more worth
Then the coarse and country fair,
That doth haunt the hearth or dairy. Ben Jonson.
What stores my dairies and my folds contain!
A thousand lambs that wander on the plain.
Dryden.

She in pens his flocks will fold,
And then produce her dairy store. Dryden.

3. Pasturage; milk farm; ground where milk cattle are kept.

Dairies, being well housewifed, are exceeding commodious. Bacon.
Children, in dairy countries, do wax more tall than where they feed more upon bread and flesh. Bacon.

DA'IRYMAID. n. f. [dairy and maid.]
The woman servant whose business is to manage the milk.

The poorest of the sex have still an itch
To know their fortunes, equal to the rich;
The *dairy*maid enquires if she shall take
The trusty taylor, and the cook forsake. Dryden.
Come up quickly, or we shall conclude that thou art in love with one of Sir Roger's dairy- maids. Addison.

DA'ISY. n. f. [dagereage, day's eye.
Chaucer.] A spring flower.

It hath a perennial root: the stalks are naked, and never branch out: the cup of the flower is scaly and simple, divided into many segments to the foot-stalk. The flowers are radiated; and the heads, after the petals are fallen off, resemble ebble cones. Maler.

When daisies pied, and violets blue,
And lady smocks all over white,
And cuckoo buds of yellow hue,
Do paint the meadows much bedight. Shakspeare.

D A L

As he passed, the woods put forth their blof-soms, the earth her primroses and daisies, to behold him. Howel.
Now hawthorns blossom, now the daisies
spring;
Now leaves the trees, and flow'rs adorn the ground. Pope.
This will find thee picking of daisies, or smelling to a lock of hay. Addison.
Fair-handed Spring unbosoms every grace;
The daisy, primrose, violet. Thomson.

DALE. n. f. [dalei, Gothick; dal, Dutch and German.] A low place between hills; a vale; a valley.

Long toft with storms, and beat with bitter winds,
High over hills, and low adown the dale,
She wand'ring many a wood, and meatur'd many a vale. Fairy Queen.

Before the downfall of the fairy state,
This dale, a pleasing region, not unblest,
This dale possess'd they, and had still possess'd.
Ticket.

He steals along the lonely dale. Thomson.

DA'LLIANCE. n. f. [from dally.]

1. Interchange of caresses; acts of fondness.

Look thou betwix: do not give dalliance Too much the rein: the strongest oaths are draw
To th' fire 't' blood. Shakspeare's Tempest.
Nor gentle purpose, nor endearing smiles,
Wanted; nor youthful dalliance, as befits
Fair couple link'd in happy nuptial league, Alone as they. Milton.

I'll head my people;
Then think of dalliance when the danger's o'er:
My warlike spirits work now another way,
And my soul's tun'd to trumpets. Dryden.

2. Conjugal conversation.

The giant, self-dismayed with the sound,
Where he with his Duesia dalliance found,
In haste came rushing forth from inner bow'r.
Fairy Queen.

That bower not mystick, where the sapient
king
Held dalliance with his fair Egyptian spouse. Milton.

Thou claim'st me for thy fire,
And my fair sun here show'st me, the dear pledge
Of dalliance had with thee in heav'n. Milton.

3. Delay; procrastination.

Both wind and tide stay for this gentleman;
And I, to blame, have held him here too long.—
—Good lord, you use this dalliance to excuse
Your breach of promise. Shakspeare.

DA'LLIER. n. f. [from dally.] A trifter;
a fondler.

The dally dalliers with pleasant words, with smiling countenances, and with wagers purposed to be lost before they were purposed to be made.
Ascham.

DA'LLOP. n. f. [of unknown etymology.]
A tuft, or clump. Not in use.

Of barley the sweetest and greenest ye find,
Leave standing in dallops till time ye do bind.
Tusser.

To DA'LLY. v. n. [dollen, Dutch, to trifle.]

1. To trifle; to play the fool; to amuse one's self with idle play; to lose time in trifles; to procrastinate idly.

Take up thy master:
If thou should'st dally half an hour, his life,
With thine, and all that offer to defend him,
Stand in assured loss. Shakspeare's King Lear.
He left his cur, and laying hold Upon his arms, with courage bold
Cried out, 'tis now no time to dally,
The enemy begin to rally. Hudibras.

We have trifled too long already: it is madness to dally any longer, when our souls are at stake. Calamy's Sermons.

D A M

One hundred thousand pounds must be raised;
for there is no dallying with hunger. Swift.

2. To exchange caresses; to play the wanton; to fondle.

He is not loiling on a lewd love bed,
But on his knees at meditation;
Not dallying with a brace of courtizans,
But meditating with two deep divines. Shakspeare.

3. To sport; to play; to frolick.

She her arms buildeth in the cedar's top,
And dallies with the wind, and scorns the sun.
Shakspeare.

4. To delay.

They that would not be reformed by that correction, wherein be dallied with them, shall feel a judgment worthy of God. Wisdome.

To DA'LLY. v. a. To put off; to delay; to amuse till a proper opportunity.

He set down to perform service, not by the hazard of one set battle, but by dallying off the time with often skirmishes. Knollys History.

DAM. n. f. [from dame, which formerly signified mother. Had Nero never been an emperour, should never his dame have been slain. Chaucer.]

1. The mother: used of beasts, or other animals not human.

The dum runs lowing up and down,
Looking the way her harmless young one went,
And can do nought but wail her dailing loss.
Shakspeare.

Mother, says a sick kite, let me have your prayers.—Alas, my child, says the dum, which of the gods shall I go to? L'Estrange.

Birds bring but one morsel of meat at a time, and have not fewer, it may be, than seven or eight young in the nest together, which, at the return of their dams, do all at once, with equal greediness, hold up their heads and gape. Reyn.

2. A human mother, in contempt or de-teilation.

This brat is none of mine;
It is the issue of Polixena:
Hence with it, and, together with the dum,
Commit them to the fire. Shakspeare Winter's Tale.

DAM. n. f. [damm, Dutch.] A mole or bank to confine water.

As when the sea breaks o'er its bounds,
And overflows the level grounds,
Those banks and dams, that like a screen
Did keep it out, now keep it in. Hudibras.

Not with so fierce a rage the foaming flood Roars, when he finds his rapid course withstood;
Bears down the dams with unresisted sway,
And sweeps the cattle and the cots away. Dryden.
Let loose the reins to all your wat'ry store,
Bear down the dams, and open every door.
Dryden.

The inside of the damm must be very smooth and freight; and if it is made very sloping on each side, it is the better. Mortimer's Husbandry.

To DAM. v. a. [demman, ponedemman,
Sax. dammen, Dutch.]

1. To confine, or shut up, water by moles or dams.

I'll have the current in this place damm'd up;
And here the smug and filves Trent shall run
In a new channel, fair and evenly. Shakspeare.

Home I would go,
But that my doors are hateful to my eyes,
Fill'd and damm'd up with gaping creditors,
Watchful as fowlers when their game will spring.
Orway.

Boggy lands are fed by springs, pmt by a weight of earth, that dams in the water, and causes it to spread. Mortimer.

'Tis you must drive that trouble from your soul;

As streams, when damm'd, forget their ancient current,

And, wond'ring at their banks, in other channels flow. Smith.

D A M

1. It is used by Shakspeare of fire, and by Milton of light.

The more thou damm'st it up, the more it burns. Shakspeare.

Moon! if your influence be quite damm'd up With black usurping mists, some gentle taper, Though a rush-candle from the wicker hole Of some clay habitation, visit us With thy long levell'd rule of streaming light. Milton.

DAMAGE. n. f. [damage, French.]

1. Mischief; hurt; detriment.

Gross errors and absurdities many commit for want of a friend to tell them of them, to the great damage both of their fame and fortune. Bacon.

Such as were sent from thence did commonly do more hurt and damage to the English subjects than to the Irish enemies, by their continual ceas and extortion. Davies.

He repulsed the enemy very much to their damage. Clarendon.

2. Loss; mischief suffered.

His heart exalts him in the harm Already done, to have dispeopled heav'n, My damage fondly deem'd! Milton.

3. The value of mischief done.

They believed that they were not able, though they should be willing to sell all they have in Ireland, to pay the damages which had been sustained by the war. Clarendon.

4. Reparation of damage; retribution.

The bishop demanded restitution of the spoils taken by the Scots, or damages for the same. Bacon.

Tell me whether, upon exhibiting the several particulars which I have related to you, I may not sue her for damages in a court of justice? Addison.

5. In law.

Any hurt or hinderance that a man taketh in his estate. In the common law it particularly signifies a part of what the jurors be to enquire of; for, after verdict given of the principal cause, they are likewise asked their consciences touching costs, which are the charges of suit, and damages, which contain the hinderance which the plaintiff or defendant hath suffered, by means of the wrong done him by the defendant or tenant. Cowell.

When the judge had awarded due damages to a person into whose field a neighbour's oxen had broke, it is reported that he reversed his own sentence, when he heard that the oxen, which had done this mischief, were his own. Watts.

- To DAMAGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To mischief; to injure; to impair; to hurt; to harm.

I consider time as an immense ocean, into which many noble authors are entirely swallowed up, many very much shattered and damaged, some quite disjointed and broken into pieces. Addison.

- To DAMAGE. v. n. To take damage, or be damaged.

DAMAGEABLE. adj. [from damage.]

1. Susceptible of hurt: as, damageable goods.

2. Mischievous; pernicious.

Obscene and immodest talk is offensive to the purity of God, damageable and infectious to the innocence of our neighbours, and most pernicious to ourselves. Government of the Tongue.

DAMASCENS. n. f. [damascenus, from Damascus.] A small plum; a damson, as it is now spoken.

In April follow the cherry-tree in blossom, the damascene and plum-trees in blossom, and the white thorn in leaf. Bacon.

In fruits the white commonly is meaner, as in pear-plums and damascenes; and the choicest plums are black. Bacon.

DAMASK. n. f. [damasquin, Fr. damaschino, Ital. from Damascus.]

D A M

1. Linen or silk woven in a manner invented at Damascus, by which part, by a various direction of the threads, exhibits flowers or other forms.

Not any weaver which his work doth boast In diaper, damask, or in lyne. Spenser.

Wipe your shoes, for want of a clout, with a damask napkin. Swift's Rules to Servants.

2. It is used for red colour in Fairfax, from the damask rose.

To DAMASK. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To form flowers upon stuffs.

2. To variegate; to diversify.

They fat recline

On the soft downy bank, damask'd with flowers. Milton.

Around him dance the rosy hours, And damasking the ground with flow'rs, With ambient sweets perfume the morn. Fenton.

3. To adorn steel-work with figures; practised, I suppose, first at Damascus.

DAMASK-PLUM. See PLUM.

DAMASK-ROSE. n. f. The rose of Damascus; a red rose. See ROSE.

Damask-roses have not been known in England above one hundred years, and now are so common. Bacon.

No gradual bloom is wanting from the bud, Nor broad carnations, nor gay spotted pinks, Nor, shower'd from ev'ry luth, the damask-rose. Thomson.

DA'MASKENING. n. f. [from damasquiner, Fr.] The art or act of adorning iron or steel, by making incisions, and filing them up with gold or silver wire: used in enriching the blades of swords, and locks of pistols. Chambers.

DAME. n. f. [dame, Fr. dama, Spanish.]

1. A lady; the old title of honour to women.

The word dame originally signified a mistress of a family, who was a lady; and it is used still in the English law to signify a lady: but in common use, now-a-days, it represents a farmer's wife, or a mistress of a family of the lower rank in the country. Watts' Logic.

Bless you, fair dame! I am not to you known, Though in your state of honour I am perfect. Shakspeare.

Not all these lords do vex me half so much As that proud dame, the lord protector's wife. Shakspeare.

Shut your mouth, dame! Shakspeare's K. Lear.

Sovereign of creatures, universal dame! Milton.

2. It is still used in poetry, for women of rank.

His father Faustus, a Laurentian dame His mother, fair Matia was her name. Dryden.

Who would not repeat that bliss, And frequent sight of such a dame Buy with the hazard of his fame? Waller.

3. Mistress of a low family.

They killed the poor cock; for, say they, if it were not for his waking our dame, she would not wake us. L'Estrange.

4. Woman in general.

We're willing dames enough; there cannot be That vulture in you to devour so many As will to greatness dedicate themselves. Shakspeare.

DAMES-VIOLET. n. f. A plant, called also queen's gillyflower. Miller.

To DAMN. v. a. [damno, Latin.]

1. To doom to eternal torments in a future state.

It is most necessary, that the church, by doctrine and decree, do damn and send to hell for ever those facts and opinions. Bacon.

D A M

2. To procure or cause to be eternally condemned.

That which he continues ignorant of, having done the utmost lying in his power that he might not be ignorant of it, shall not damn him. South's Sermons.

3. To condemn; to censure.

His own impartial thought Will damn, and conscience will record the fault. Dryden.

4. To hoot or hiss any publick performance; to explode.

They damn themselves, nor will my muse descend To clap with such who fools and knaves commend. Dryden.

For the great dons of wit, Phœbus gives them full privilege alone To damn all others, and cry up their own. Dryden.

You are so good a critick, that it is the greatest happiness of the modern poets that you do not bear their works; and, next, that you are not so ardent a critick as to damn them, like the rest, without hearings. Pope.

DA'MNABLE. adj. [from damn.]

1. Deserving damnation; justly doomed to never-ending punishment.

It gives him occasion of labouring with greater earnestness elsewhere, to entangle unwary minds with the snares of his damnable opinion. Hooker.

He's a creature unprepared, unmeet for death; And to transport him in the mind he is Wore damnable. Shakspeare.

As he does not reckon every schism of a damnable nature, so he is far from eluding with the new opinion of those who make it no crime. Swift.

2. It is sometimes indecently used in a low and ludicrous sense; odious; pernicious.

O thou damnable fellow! did not I pluck thee by the nose for thy speeches? Shakspeare.

DA'MNABLY. adv. [from damnable.]

1. In such a manner as to incur eternal punishment; so as to be excluded from mercy.

We will propose the question, whether those who hold the fundamentals of faith may deny Christ damnably, in respect of those consequences that arise from them? South's Sermons.

2. It is indecently used in a ludicrous sense; odiously; hatefully.

The more sweets they belov'd upon them, the more damnably their converse sunk. Dennis.

DAMNATION. n. f. [from damn.] Exclusion from divine mercy; condemnation to eternal punishment.

He that hath been affrighted with the fears of hell, or remembers how often he hath been spared from an horrible damnation, will not be ready to strangle his brother for a trifle. Taylor.

Now mine the sin, And mollify damnation with a phrase: Say you consented not to Sancho's death, But barely not forbade it. Dryden.

DA'MNATORY. adj. [from damnatorius.] Containing a sentence of condemnation.

DA'MNED. part. adj. [from damn.] Hateful; detestable; abhorred; abominable.

Not in the legions Of horrid hell can come a devil more damnd In evils to top Macbeth. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

Let not the royal bed of Denmark be A couch for luxury and damned meet. Shakspeare.

But, O! what damnd minutes tells he o'er Who doubts, yet doubts; suspects, yet strongly loves. Shakspeare.

Dare not To brand the spotless virtue of my prince With falsehoods of most base and damnd contrivance. Reeve.

D A M

DAMNIFIC. adj. [from damnify.] Procuring loss; mischievous.

TO DAMNIFY. v. a. [from damnifico, Latin.]

1. To endamage; to injure; to cause loss to any.

He, who has suffered the damage, has a right to demand in his own name, and he alone can remit, satisfaction: the damified person has the power of appropriating the goods or service of the offender, by right of self-preservation. Locke.

2. To hurt; to impair.

When now he saw himself so freshly rear,
As if late fight had nought him damified,
He was dismay'd, and 'gan his fate to fear.
Fairy Queen.

DAMNINGNESS. n. f. [from danning.] Tendency to procure damnation.

He may vow never to return to those sins which he hath had such experience of, for the emptiness and dannings of them, and so think himself a complete penitent. Hammond.

DAMP. adj. [dampe, Dutch.]

1. Moist; inclining to wet; not completely dry; foggy.

She said no more: the trembling Trojans hear,
O'erspread with a damp sweat and holy fear.
Dryden.

2. Dejected; sunk; depressed.

All these and more came flocking, but with looks Dyrncaft and damp: yet such wherein appear'd
Obscure some glimpse of joy. Milton.

DAMP. n. f.

1. Fog; moist air; moisture.

Night; not now, as ere man fell,
Wholesome, and cool, and mild; but with black air
Accompanied, with damps and dreadful gloom.
Milton.

A rift there was, which from the mountain's height
Convey'd a glimmering and malignant light;
A breathing-place to draw the damps away,
A twilight of an intercepted day. Dryden.

2. A noxious vapour exhaled from the earth.

The heat of the sun, in the hotter seasons, penetrating the exterior parts of the earth, excites those mineral exhalations in subterraneous caverns, which are called damps: these seldom happen but in the summer-time; when, the hotter the weather is, the more frequent are the damps. Woodward.

3. Dejection; depression of spirit; cloud of the mind.

Adam, by this from the cold sudden damp
Reco'ring, and his scatter'd spirits return'd,
To Michael thus his humble words address'd.
Milton.

His name struck every where so great a damp,
As Archimedes through the Roman camp.
Roscommon.

Ev'n now, while thus I stand black in thy presence,
A secret damp of grief comes o'er my thoughts.
Addison.

An eternal state he knows and confesses that he has made no provision for, that he is undone for ever: a prospect enough to cast a damp over his spiritliest hours.
Rogers.

This commendable resentment against me,
strikes a damp upon that spirit in all ranks and corporations of men.
Swift.

TO DAMP. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To wet; to moisten; to make humid.

2. To depress; to deject; to chill; to dull.

The very loss of one pleasure is enough to damp the relish of another.
L'Estrange.

Dread of death hangs over the mere natural man, and, like the hand-writing on the wall, damps all his jollity. Atterbury.

It would be enough to damp their warmth in such pursuits, if they could once reflect, that in such course they will be sure to run upon the very rock they mean to avoid. Swift.

3. To weaken; to abate; to hebetate; to discourage.

A soft body dampeth the sound much more than a hard. Bacon.

4. To hebetate; to abate motion; to discourage; to dull.

Ufury dulls and damps all industries, improvement, and new inventions, wherein money would be thriving, if it were not for this slug. Bacon.

Unless an age too late, or cold Climate, or years, damp my intended wing Depict'd. Milton.

DAMPISHNESS. n. f. [from damp.] Tendency to wetness; fogginess; moisture.

It hath been used by some with great success to make their walls thick; and to put a lay of chalk between the bricks, to take away all dampishness. Bacon.

DAMPNESS. n. f. [from damp.] Moisture; fogginess.

Nor need they fear the dampness of the sky
Should flag their wings, and hinder them to fly;
'Twas only water thrown on tails too dry.
Dryden.

By stacks they often have very great loss, by the dampness of the ground, which rots and spoils it. Mortimer.

DAMPY. adj. [from damp.] Dejected; gloomy; sorrowful.

The lords did disperse dampy thoughts, which the remembrance of his uncle might raise, by applying him with exercises and disports.
Hayward.

DAMSEL. n. f. [damoiselle, French.]

1. A young gentlewoman; a young woman of distinction: now only used in verse.

Kneeling, I my servant's smiles implore,
And one mad damsel dares dispute my pow'r.
Prior.

2. An attendant of the better rank.

With her train of damsels she was gone
In shady walks, the scorching heat to shun.
Dryden.

3. A clown; a country lads.

The clowns are whoremasters, and the damsels with child. Gay.

DAMSON. n. f. [corruptly from damiscene.] A small black plum. See DAMASCENE.

My wife desir'd some damsons,
And made me climb with danger of my life.
Shakespeare.

DAN. n. f. [from dominus, as now don in Spanish; and donna, Italian, from domina.] The old term of honour for men, as we now say master. I know not that it was ever used in prose, and imagine it to have been rather of ludicrous import.

Dan Chaucer well of English undefil'd.
Douglas.

This whimp'd, whining, purblind, wayward boy,
This signor Junio's giant dwarf, dan Cupid.
Shakespeare.

Dick, if this story pleaseth thee,
Pray thank dan Pope, who told it me. Prior.

TO DANCE. v. n. [danfer, Fr. dançar, Span. as some think from tanza, Arabic, a dance; as Junius, who loves to derive from Greek, thinks, from danos.]

D A N

To move in measure; to move with steps correspondent to the sound of instruments.

What say you to young Mr. Fenton? He capers, he dances, he has eyes of youth, he writes verses. Shakespeare.

TO DANCE. Attendance. v. n. To wait with suppleness and obsequiousness.

Men are sooner weary to dance attendance at the gates of foreign lords, than to carry the good leisure of their own magistracies. Raleigh's Essays.

It upbraids you,
To let your father's friend, for three long months,
Thus dance attendance for a word of audience.
Dryden.

TO DANCE. v. a. To make to dance; to put into a lively motion.

Thy grandfire lov'd thee well;
Many a time he danc'd thee on his knee. Shaks.

That I see thee here,
Thou noble thing! more dances my rapt heart,
Than when I first my wedded mistress saw Beside my threshold. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

In pestilences, the malignity of the infecting vapour dances the principal spirits. Bacon.

DANCE. n. f. [from the verb.] A motion of one or many in concert, regulated by music.

Our dance of custom, round about the oak of Hecate the hunter. Shakespeare.

The honourablest part of talk is to give the occasion, and again to moderate and pass to somewhat else; for then a man leads the dance. Bacon.

But you perhaps expect a modish feast,
With curious songs and wanton dances grac'd.
Dryden.

DANCER. n. f. [from dance.] One that practises the art of dancing.

He at Philippi kept
His sword e'en like a dancer, while I strook
The lean and wrinkled Cassius. Shakespeare.

Musicians and dancers! take some truce
With these your pleasing labours; for great use
As much weariness as perfection brings. Donne.

The earl was too far from being a good dancer, that he was no graceful goer. Hutton.

It is a usual practice for our funambulators, or dancers on the rope, to attempt somewhat like to flying. Wilkins.

He, perfect dancer! climbs the rope
And balances your fear and hope. Prior.

Nature, I thought, perform'd too mean a part,
Forming her movements to the rules of art;
And, vex'd, I found that the musicians hand
Had o'er the dancer's mind too great command.
Prior.

DANCINGMASTER. n. f. [dance and master.] One who teaches the art of dancing.

The apes were taught their apes tricks by a dancingmaster. L'Estrange.

The legs of a dancingmaster, and the fingers of a musician, fall, as it were, naturally, without thought or pains, into regular and admirable motions. Locke on Understanding.

DANCINGSCHOOL. n. f. [dance and school.] The school where the art of dancing is taught.

They bid us to the English dancing schools,
And teach lavolias high, and swift courantos;
Saying our grace is only in our heels. Shaks.

A certain Egyptian king endowed a dancing-school for the institution of apes of quality. L'Estrange.

DANDELION. n. f. [dent de lion, French.] The name of a plant.

It agrees in all respects with the hawkweed, but only in its having a single naked stalk, with one flower upon the top. Miller.

D A N

For cowslips sweet, let dandelions spread;
For Blouzelinda, blithesome maid, is dead!

Gay's Pastorals.

DA'NDIPRAT. n. f. [dandin, French.] A little fellow; an urchin: a word used sometimes in fondness, sometimes in contempt.

To DA'NDLE. v. a. [dandelen, Dutch.]

1. To shake a child on the knee, or in the hands, to please and quiet him.

Then shall ye suck, and shall be born upon her sides, and be dandled upon her knees. Isaiah.

Thy little brethren, which, like fairy sprites, Oft slept into our chamber those sweet nights, And, kiss'd and dandled on thy father's knee, Were brib'd next day to tell what they did see.

Donne.

Courts are but superficial schools
To dandle fools.

Bacon.

Sporting the lion ramp'd, and in his paw
Dandled the kid.

Milton.

Motion occasions sleep, as we find by the common use of rocking froward children in cradles, or dandling them in their nurseries arms.

Temple.

2. To fondle; to treat like a child.

Their child shall be advanc'd,

And be received for the emperor's heir;
And let the emperor dandle him for his own.

Shakespeare.

They have put me in a silk gown, and a gaudy fool's cap; I am ashamed to be dandled thus, and cannot look in the glass without blushing, to see myself turned into such a little pretty matter.

Addison.

3. To delay; to procrastinate; to protract by trifles: not in use.

Captains do so dandle their doings, and dally in the service, as if they would not have the enemy subdued.

Spenser.

DA'NDLER. n. f. [from dandle.] He that dandles or fondles children.

DA'NDRUFF. n. f. [often written dendruff, from tan, the itch, and druff, fordid, filthy.] Scabs in the head; scurf at the roots of the hair.

DA'NEWORT. n. f. A species of elder; called also dwarf-elder, or wallwort.

DA'NGER. n. f. [danger, Fr. of uncertain derivation. Skinner derives it from damnum, Menage from angaria, Minshew from dan, death, to which Juvens seems inclined.] Risk; hazard; peril.

They that sail on the sea, tell of the danger.

Reclus.

Our craft is in danger to be set at nought. Acts.
He hath writ this to feel my affection to your honour, and to no other pretence of danger.

Shakespeare.

More danger now from man alone we find,
Than from the rocks, the billows and the wind.

Waller.

To DA'NGER. v. a. [from the noun.] To put in hazard; to endanger.

Pumpey's fun stands up

For the main foldier; whose quality going on,
The sides o' th' world may danger.

Shakespeare.

DANGERLESS. adj. [from danger.] Without hazard; without risk; exempt from danger.

He shewed no less magnanimity in dangerless despising, than others in dangerous affecting, the multiplying of kingdoms.

Sidney.

DA'NGEROUS. adj. [from danger.] Hazardous; perilous; full of danger.

A man of an ill tongue is dangerous in his city.

Ecclus.

All men counsel me to take away thy life,
likely to bring forth nothing but dangerous and wicked effects.

Sidney.

D A P

Already we have conquer'd half the war,
And the less dangerous part is left behind. Dryd.

DA'NGEROUSLY. adv. [from dangerous.] Hazardously; perilously; with danger.

But for your son, believe it, oh believe it,
Most dangerously you have with him prevail'd,
If not most mortal to him. Shakespeare's Coriol.

A sort of naughty perions

Have practis'd dangerously against your state, Dealing with witches and with conjurers. Shaks.

It is just with God to permit those, which think they stand so surely, to fall most dangerously.

Plutarch says, Tellchilla, a noble lady, being dangerously sick, was advised to apply her mind to poetry.

Peacocks.

If it were so, which but to think were pride,
My constant love would dangerously be tried. Dryd.

DA'NGEROUSNESS. n. f. [from dangerous.] Danger; hazard; peril.

I shall not need to mind you of judging of the dangerousness of diseases, by the nobleness of the part affected.

Boyle.

To DA'NGLE. v. n. [from hang, according to Skinner; as hang, bangle, dangle.] To hang loose and quivering.

Go, bind thou up yon dangling apocrycks.

Shakespeare.

He'd rather on a gibbet dangle,
Than miss his dear delight to wrangle. Hudib.

Codrus had but one leg; so short, to boot,
That his short wife's short legs hung dangling out.

Dryden.

With dangling hands he strokes th' imperial robe,
And with a cuckold's air commands the globe.

Smith.

But have you not with thought beheld
The sword hang dangling o'er the shield! Prior.

2. To hang upon any one; to be an humble, useless, harmless follower.

The prebiterians, and other fanatics that dangle after them, are well inclined to pull down the present establishment.

Swift.

DA'NGLER. n. f. [from dangle.] A man that hangs about women only to waste time.

A dangler is of neither sex.

Ralph.

He her the maiden sleeping found

On the dank and dirty ground.

Shakespeare.

The dank, and rising on this pious tour

The mid aerial sky.

Milton.

Through each thicket, dank or dry

Like a black mid, low creeping, he held on

His midnight search.

Milton.

Now that the fields are dank, and ways are mire,

Where shall we sometimes meet, and by the fire

Help waste a sullen day?

Milton.

By the rusky-fringed bank,

Where grows the willow and the other dank,

My sliding chariot stays.

Milton.

Me, in my vow'd

Picture, the sacred wall declares I have hung

My dank and drooping weeds

To the stern god of sea.

Milton.

To wash the skins of beasts and fowls herewith, would keep them from growing dank in moist weather.

Grew.

DA'NKISH. adj. Somewhat dank.

They bound me, bore me thence,

And in a dank and dankish vault at home

There left me.

Shakespeare.

To DAP. v. n. [corrupted from dip.] To let fall gently into the water: a word,

I believe, only used by anglers.

I have taught him how to catch a chub, by dapping with a grasshopper.

Waller.

DAPA'TICAL. adj. [from dapaticus, Lat.

tin.] Sumptuous in cheer.

Bailey.

D A R

DAPPER. adj. [dapper, Dutch.] Lit^{le}tle and active; lively without bulk. It is usually spoken in contempt.

Lake.

To DA'PPLE. v. a. [from the adjective.] To streak; to vary; to diversify with colours.

But under him a grey fleed did he wield,
Whole sides with dappled circles were endiged.

Spenser.

The gentle day

Dapples the drowsy east with spots of grey.

Shakespeare.

Horses that are dippled turn white; and odd squirrels turn grizzly.

Bacon.

The lark begins his flight,
From his watch-tower in the skies,

Till the dappled dawn doth rise.

Milton.

The dappled pink, and blushing rose,

Deck my charming Chloe's hair.

Prior.

The gods, to curse Pamela with her prayers,

Gave the gilt coach and dappled Flanders mares.

Pope.

DAR. } n. f. A fish found in the Sea.
DART. } vern. Bailey. Dart is the same with Dace.

To DARE. v. n. pret. I darst; the preterit I dared belongs to the active dare; part. I have dared, [deapman, Saxon; derren, Dutch.] To have courage for any purpose; not to be afraid; to adventure; to be adventurous.

Darst thou be as good as thy word now?—

Why, Hal, thou knowest, as thou art but a man, I dare; but, as thou art a prince, I fear thee.

Shakespeare.

I dare do all that may become a man;

Who dare do more, is none.

Shakespeare.

They are both hanged; and so would this be, if he darst steal any thing adventurously.

Neither of them was of that temper as to dare any dangerous fact.

Haywood.

The father bore it with undaunted soul,

Like one who darst his destiny controul.

Deliberate and well-weighted courage knows both to be cautious and to dare, as occasion offers.

Dryden.

We dare not build much upon such a notion or doctrine, till it be very fully examined.

Watts.

To DARE. v. a. pret. I dared, not I darst. To challenge; to defy.

I never in my life

Did hear a challenge urg'd more modestly,

Unless a brother should a brother dare

To gentle exercise and proof of arms.

Shaks.

Here the stands:

Take but possession of her with a touch;

I dare thee but to breathe upon my love.

He had many days come half seas over; and sometimes passing further, came and lay at the mouth of the harbour, daring them to fight.

Kneller.

Masters of the arts of policy thought that they might even defy and dare Providence to the fact.

South.

All cold, but in her breast, I will despise;

And dare all heat but that in Ceba's eyes.

Time! I dare thee to discover

Such a youth and such a lover.

Dryden.

Prefumptuous wretch! with mortal art to dare
Immortal power, and brave the thunderer. Grav.
To DARE Larks. To catch them by means of a looking-glass, or by keeping a bird of prey hovering aloft, which keeps them in amaze till caught; to amaze.

Shrimps are dipped up in shallow water with little round nets, not much unlike that which is used for daring larks. Carew.

As larks lie dar'd to shun the hobby's flight.
Dryden.

DARE. n. f. [from the verb.] Defiance;
challenge.

Sextus Pompeius
Hath given the dare to Cæsar, and commands
The empire of the sea. Shakspeare.

DARE. n. f. [leuciscus.] A small fish, the same with dace.

DAREFUL. adj. [dare and full.] Full of defiance. Not in use.

We might have met them dareful, beard to beard,

And beat them backward home. Shakspeare.

DARING. adj. [from dare.] Bold; adventurous; fearless; courageous; in-repid; brave; stout.

The last Georgick has many metaphors, but not so daring as this; for human passions may be more naturally ascribed to a bee than to an inanimate plant. Addison.

The song too daring, and the theme too great.

Prior.

Grieve not, O daring prince! that noble heart.

Pope.

DARINGLY. adv. [from daring.] Boldly;
courageously; fearlessly; impudently;
outrageously.

Some of the great principles of religion are every day openly and daringly attacked from the press. Atterbury.

Your brother, fir'd with his success,
Too daringly upon the foe did press. Halifax.

DARINGNESS. n. f. [from daring.] Bold-
ness.

DARK. adj. [beope, Saxon.]

1. Not light; wanting light.

Pleance, his son, who keeps him company,
Must embrace the fate of that dark hour. Shakf.

While we converse with her, we mark
No want of day, nor think it dark. Waller.

2. Not of a showy or vivid colour.

If the plague be somewhat dark, and the plague spread not in the skin, the priest shall pronounce him clean. Leviticus.

In Muscovy the generality of the people are more inclined to have dark coloured hair than flaxen. Boyle.

3. Blind; without the enjoyment of light.

Thou wretched daughter of a dark old man,
Conduct my way steps. Dryd. and Lee's Oedip.

4. Opaque; not transparent: as, lead is a dark body.

5. Obscure; not perspicuous.

What may seem dark at the first, will afterwards be found more plain. Hester.

Mean time we shall express our darker purpose.
Shakspeare.

6. Not enlightened by knowledge; ignorant.

The age, wherein he liv'd was dark; but he Could not want light, who taught the world to see. Denham.

7. Gloomy; not cheerful.

All men of dark tempers, according to their degree of melancholy or enthusiasm, may find convents fitted to their humours. Addison.

DARK. n. f.

1. Darkness; obscurity; want of light.

Come, thick night,

And pall thee in the dunnest smoke of hell,

That my keen knife see not the wound it makes;
Nor heav'n peep through the blanket of the dark,
To cry, hold! Shakspeare's Macbeth.

Cloud and ever-during dark
Surrounds me! from the cheerful ways of men Cut off. Milton.

Whereas seeing requires light, and a free medium, and a right line to the objects, we can hear in the dark immured, and by curve lines.

Holder.

2. Obscurity; condition of one unknown.

All he says of himself is, that he is an obscure person; one, I suppose he means, that is in the dark. Atterbury.

3. Want of knowledge.

'Till we ourselves perceive by our own understandings, we are as much in the dark, and as void of knowledge, as before. Locke.

To DARK. v. a. [from the noun.] To darken; to obscure. Obsolete.

Fair when that cloud of pride, which oft doth dark

His goodly light, with smiles she drives away.
Spenser.

To DARKEN. v. a. [from dark.]

1. To make dark; to deprive of light.

Black with surrounding forests then it stood,
That hung above, and darken'd all the flood.
Addison.

Whether the darken'd room to muse invite,
Or whiten'd wall provoke the skew'r to write.
Pope.

2. To cloud; to perplex.

Such was his wisdom, that his confidence did seldom darken his foresight, especially in things near hand. Bacon.

3. To foul; to sully.

The lusts and passions of men do sully and darken their minds, even by a natural influence.
Tillotson.

To DA'RKEN. v. n. To grow dark.

DA'RKING. [a participle, as it seems, from darkle, which yet I have never found; or perhaps a kind of diminutive from dark, as young, youngling.] Being in the dark; being without light: a word merely poetical.

O, wilt thou darkling leave me? do not so.
Shakspeare.

Darkling stands
The varying shore o' th' world. Shakspeare.

The wakeful bird
Sings darkling, and, in shadowy covert hid,
Tunes her nocturnal note. Milton.

Darkling they mourn their fate, whom Circe's
pow'r,

With words and wicked herbs, from human kind
Had alter'd, and in brutal shapes confin'd. Dry.

DA'RKLY. adv. [from dark.] In a situation void of light; obscurely; blindly;
gloomily; uncertainly.

For well you know, and can record alone,
What fame to future times conveys but darkly down. Dryden.

DA'RKNESS. n. f. [from dark.]

1. Absence of light.

Darkness was upon the face of the deep.
Genesis.

I go whence I shall not return, even to the land of darkness and the shadow of death. Job.

2. Opakeness; want of transparency.

3. Obscurity; want of perspicuity; dif-ficultness to the understanding.

4. Infernal gloom; wickedness.

The instruments of darkness tell us truths;
Win us with honest trifles, to betray us
In deepest consequence. Shakspeare.

5. State of being intellectually clouded;
ignorance; uncertainty.

All the light truth has, or can have, is from the clearness and validity of those proofs upon which it is received; so talk of any other light in the understanding, is to put ourselves in the dark, or in the power of the prince of darkness.

Locke.

6. The empire of Satan, or the devil.

Who hath delivered us from the power of darkness, and translated us into the kingdom of his dear Son. Colossians.

DA'RKsome. adj. [from dark.] Gloomly; obscure; not well enlightened; not luminous.

He brought him thro' a darksome narrow pass
To a broad gate. Spenser.

And her fair eyes, like stars that dimm'd were
With darksome cloud, now shew their goodly beams. Spenser.

You must not look to have an image in any thing lightsome; for even a face in iron, red-hot, will not be seen, the light confounding the small differences of lightsome and darksome, which shew
the figure. Bacon.

A darksome cloud of locusts, swarming down,
Must eat, and on the ground leave nothing green.
Milton.

He, here with us to be,
Forsook the courts of everlasting day,
And chose with us a darksome house of mortal clay.
Milton.

Mistaken blessing, which old age they call,
'Tis a long, nalky, darksome hospital. Dryden.

The darksome pines, that o'er yon rocks recline'd,
Wave high, and murmur to the hollow wind.
Pope.

DA'RLING. adj. [beopling, Saxon; diminutive of dear.] Favourite; dear; beloved; regarded with great kindness and tenderness.

'Tis not for a generous prince to countenance oppression and injustice, even in his most darling favourites. L'Estrange.

Have a care lest some beloved notion, or some darling science, too far prevail over your mind.
Watts.

DA'RLING. n. f. A favourite; one much beloved.

Young Ferdinand they suppose is drawn'd,
And his and my lov'd darling. Shakspeare.

In Thames, the ocean's darling, England's pride,
The pleasing emblem of his reign does glide.
Halifax.

She became the darling of the prince's.
Addison.

To DARN. v. a. [of uncertain original.]

To mend holes by imitating the texture of the stuff.

Will the thy linen wath, or hoien darn? Gay.

He spent every day ten hours in his closet, in darning his stockings, which he performed to admiration. Swift.

DA'RNEL. n. f. [holium.] A weed growing in the fields.

He was met ev'n now
Crown'd with rank fumiter and furrow-weeds,
Darnel, and all the idle weeds that grow
In our sustaining corn. Shakspeare.

Want ye corn for bread?

'Twas full of darnel; do you like the taste?
Shakspeare.

No fruitful crop the sickly fields return;
But oats and darnel choke the rising corn. Dryden.

To DA'RRAIN. v. a. [This word is by

Junius referred to dare: it seems to me more probably deducible from arranger la bataille.]

1. To prepare for battle; to range troops for battle.

The town-boys parted in twain, the one side calling themselves Pompeians, the other Cæsarians; and then darraining a kind of battle, but without arms, the Cæsarians got the over hand.
Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

Comes Warwick, backing of the duke of York:

Darrain your battle; for they are at hand. Shak.

2. To apply to the fight : of single combatants.

Therewith they 'gan to hurlen greedily,
Rehoubted battle ready to daraine. Spenser.

DART. n. f. [dard, French.]

1. A missile weapon thrown by the hand; a small lance.

Here one is wounded or slain with a piece of a rock or flint; there another with a dart, arrow, or lance. Pemham.

O'erwhelm'd with darts, which from afar they fling,

The weapons round his hollow temples ring.

Dryden.

2. [In poetry.] Any missile weapon.

To DART. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To throw offensively.

He whets his tusks, and turns, and darts the war;

Th' invaders dart their jav'lines from afar. Dryden.

2. To throw; to emit : as, the sun darts his beams on the earth.

I can come, and ask'd what magic caus'd my faint;

Or what ill eyes malignant glances dart. Pope.

To DART. v. n.

1. To fly as a dart.

2. To let fly with hostile intention.

Now, darting Parthia, art thou struck. Shak.

To DASH. v. a. [The etymology of this word, in any of its senses, is very doubtful.]

1. To throw or strike any thing suddenly against something.

If you dash a stone against a stone in the bottom of the water, it maketh a sound. Bacon.

A man that cuts himself, and tears his own flesh, and dares his head against the stones, does not act so unreasonably as the wicked man.

Tillotson.

2. To break by collision.

They that stand high have many blasts to shake
them;

And, if they fall, they dash themselves to pieces.

Shakespeare.

David's throne shall then be like a tree,
Spreading and overshadow'ing all the earth;

Or as a stone, that shall to pieces dash
All monarchies besides throughout the world.

Milton.

3. To throw water in flashes.

Dashing water on them may prove the best remedy. Mortimer.

Middling his head, and prone to earth his view,
With ears and chest that dash the morning dew.

Tickell.

Never was dash'd out, at one lucky hit,
A fool so just a copy of a wit. Pope.

8. To obliterate; to blot; to cross out.

To dash over this with a line, will deface the whole copy extremely, and to a degree that, I fear, may duplicate you. Pope.

Vol. I.

9. To confound; to make ashamed suddenly; to surprise with shame or fear;
to depress; to suppress.

His tongue

Dropp'd manna, and could make the worse appear

The better reason, to perplex and dash
Maturest counsels. Milton.

Yearly enjoin'd, some say, to undergo
This annual, humbling certain number'd days,

To dash their pride and joy for man reduc'd.

Milton.

An unknown hand still check'd my forward joys

Dash'd me with blushes. Dryden and Lee's Oed.

To dash this evil, read out the practice of clitilian emperors. South.

After they had sufficiently blasted him in his personal capacity, they found it an easy work to dash and overthrow him in his political. South.

Nothing dash'd the confidence of the mule like the braying of the ass, while he was dilating upon his genealogy. L'Estrange.

The nymph, when nothing could Narcissus move,

Still dash'd with blushes for her slighted love.

Addison.

Some stronger pow'r eludes our sickly will;
Dashes our rising hope with certain ill. Prior.

Dash the proud gamester in his gilded car;
Bare the mean heart that lurks beneath a star.

Pope.

To DASH. v. n.

1. To fly off the surface by a violent motion.

If the vessel be suddenly stop'd in its motion, the liquor continues its motion, and dashes over the sides of the vessel. Cheyne.

2. To fly in flashes with a loud noise.

On each hand the gushing waters play,
And down the rough cascade, all dashing, fall.

Thomson.

3. To rush through water, so as to make it fly.

Doeg, tho' without knowing how or why, Spurr'd boldly on, and dash'd through thick and thin,

Thro' sense and nonsense, never out or in.

Dryden.

- DASH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Collision.

By the touch ethereal rous'd,
The dash of clouds, or irritating war
Of fighting winds, while all is calm below,
They furious spring. Thomson.

2. Infusion; something worse mingled in a small proportion.

There is nothing which one regards so much with an eye of mirth and pity, as innocence, when it has in it a dash of folly. Addison.

3. A mark in writing; a line —, to note a pause, or omission.

He is afraid of letters and characters, of notes and dashes, which, set together, do signify nothing. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

In modern wit, all printed trash is Set off with num'rous breaks and dashes. Swift.

4. Sudden stroke; blow; act: ludicrous.

Stand back you lords, and give us leave awhile.
—She takes upon her bravely at first dash.

Shakespeare.

- DASH. adv. An expression of the sound of water dashed.

Hark, hark, the waters fall;
And, with a murmuring sound,
Dash, dash, upon the ground,
To gentle slumbers call. Dryden.

- DASTARD. n. f. [adastariga, Sax.] A coward; a poltron; a man infamous for fear.

The cruelty and envy of the people,
Permitted by our dastard nobles,

Have suffer'd me by th' voice of slaves to be Whoop'd out of Rome. Shakespeare.

Who now my matchless valour dare oppose?
How long will Dares wait his dastard toes?

Dryden.

Dastard and drunkard, mean and infidel;
Tongue-valiant hero, vaunter of thy might,
In threats the foremost, out the last in fight.

Dryden.

Bug-beer thoughts, in the minds of children, make them dastards, and spread of the shadow of darkness ever after. Laroc.

Curse on their dastard souls, they stand automated! Addison.

1. The time at which a letter is written, marked at the end or the beginning.

2. The time at which any event happened.

3. The time stipulated when any thing shall be done.

His days and times are past,
And my reliance on his dated dates

Has limit my credit. Shakespeare's Timon.

My father's promise ties me not to time;
And bonds without a date, they say, are void.

Dryden.

4. End; conclusion.

What time would spare, from steel receives its date;

And monuments, like men, submit to fate. Pope.

5. Duration; continuance.

Could the declining of this fate, O friend,
Our date to immortality extend?

Dehau.

Then raise,
From the conflagrant mass, purg'd and refin'd,
New heav'ns, new earth, ages of endless date.

Founders of righteousness. Milton.

6. [from datylus.] The fruit of the date-tree.

Hold, take these keys, and fetch more spices, nutse.

—They call for dates and quinces in the poetry.

Shakespeare.

- DATE-TREE. n. f. See PALM, of which it is a species.

- To DATE. v. a. [from the noun.] To note with the time at which any thing is written or done.

'Tis all one, in respect of eternal duration yet behind, whether we begin the world so many millions of ages ago, or date from the late beginning about six thousand years. Bentley.

To all their dated backs he turns you round;
These Aldus printed, those Du Suet has bound.

L'ape.

DA'TELESS. adj. [from date.] Without any fixed term.

The day slow hours shall not determinate
The dateless limit of thy dear exile. Shakespeare.

To DAUB. v. a. [dabben, Dut. dauber, French.]

1. To smear with something adhesive.
She took for him an ark of bulrushes, and daubed it with slime and with pitch. Exod.

2. To paint coarsely.
Hasty daubing will but spoil the picture, and make it so unnatural as must want false light to set it off. Orsony.

They snatched out of his hands a lame imperfect piece, rudely daubed over with too little reflection. Dryden.

If a picture is daubed with many bright and glaring colours, the vulgar admire it as an excellent piece. Watts.

3. To cover with something specious or gross, something that disguises what it lies upon.

So smooth he daub'd his vice with shew of virtue,

He liv'd from all attainder of suspect. Shaksp.

4. To lay on any thing gaudily or ostentatiously.

Since princes will have such things, it is better they should be graced with elegance, than daubed with cost.

Let him be daub'd with lace, live high, and where;

Sometimes be lousy, but be never poor. Dryden.

5. To flatter grossly.

Let every one, therefore, attend the sentence of his conscience; for, he may be sure, it will not daub nor flatter.

To DAUB. v. n. To play the hypocrite: this sense is not in use.

I cannot daub it further;
And yet I must. Shakespeare.

DA'UBER. n. f. [from daub.]

1. One that daubs.

2. A coarse low painter.

What they called his picture, had been drawn at length by the daubers or almost all nations, and still unlike him. Dryden.

Parts of different species jumbled together, according to the mad imagination of the dauber, to cause laughter. Dryden.

A sign post dauber would disdain to paint
The one-eyed hero on his elephant. Dryden.

The treacherous spitter, Thomas,
Hangs a new angel two doors from us,
As true as daubers hands can make it. Swift.

3. A low flatterer.

DA'UBRY. n. f. [from daub.] An old word for any thing artful.

She works by charms, by spells; and such daubry as this beyond our element. Shakespeare.

Not in vain the industrious kind
With dauby wax and flowers the chinks have bind. Dryden.

Some the gall'd robes with dauby marble bird,
Or fear-cloth mauls with strong tarpawling coats. Dryden.

DA'UGHTER. n. f. [daubtar, Gothick; dohter, Saxon; dohter, Runic; dohter, German; dochter, Dutch.]

1. The female offspring of a man or woman.

Your wives, your daughters,
Your matrons, and your maids, could not fill up
The cistern of my lust. Shakespeare.

Now Aurora, daughter of the dawn,
With rosy lustre purpled o'er the lawn. Pope.

2. A daughter in law, or son's wife.

3. A woman.
Jacob went out to see the daughters of the land. Ormsby.

4. [In poetry.] Any descendant.

5. The female penitent of a confessor.
Are you at leisure, holy father, now;
Or shall I come to you at evening mass?—
—My leisure serves me, penitence daughter now. Shakespeare.

To DAUNT. v. a. [domter, Fr. domitare, Lat.] To discourage; to fright; to intimidate.

Faifax, whose name inarms thro' Europe rings,
And fills all mountains with envy or with praise,
And at her jealous monarchs with amaze,
And rumours loud, which daunt remotest kings. Milton.

Where the rude ax with heaved stroke,
Was never heard the nymphs to daunt;
Or light them from their hollow'd haunt. Milt.
Some preferences daunt and discourage us, when others raise us to a brisk assurance. Glanville.

DA'UNTLESS. adj. [from daunt.] Fearless; not dejected; not discouraged.

Grow great by your example, and put on
The dauntless spirit of resolution. Shakespeare.
Dauntless he rols, and to the fight return'd:
With shame his glowing cheeks, his eyes with sury burn'd. Dryden's Virgil.

He, not by wants or woes oppress'd,
Stems the bold torrent with a dauntless breast. Dryden.

The utmost weight of affliction from ministerial power and popular hatred, were almost worth bearing, for the glory of such a dauntless conduct as he has shewn under it. Pope.

DA'UNTLESSNESS. n. f. [from dauntless.] Fearlessness.

DAW. n. f. [menedula.] It is supposed by Skinner to be named from his note; by Junius to be corrupted from dawl; the German tul, and dol in the Bavarian dialect, having the same signification.] A bird.

I will wear my heart upon my sleeve,
For daws to peck it. Shakespeare's Othello.

If death do quench us quite, we have great wrong,
That daws, and trees, and rocks should hail so long,

When we must in an instant pass to nought. Davies.

The loud daw, his throat displaying, draws
The whole assembly of his fellow daws. Waller.

DAWK. n. f. A cant word among the workmen for a hollow, rupture, or incision, in their stuff.

Observe if any hollow or dawks be in the length. Mason.

To DAWK. v. a. To mark with an incision.

Should they apply one side of the tool the edges lie on, the twist coming about of the work would, where a small irregularity of that should happen, jobb the edge into the flut, and to dawk it. Mason.

To DAWN. v. n. [supposed by the etymologists to have been originally to dagen, or advance toward day.]

1. To grow luminous; to begin to grow light.

I have been troubled in my sleep this night;
But dawning day new comfort hath inspir'd. Shakespeare.

As it began to dawn towards the first day of the week, came Mary Magdalene to see the sepulchre. Matthew.

All night I slept, oblivious of my pain;
Aurora dawn'd and Phœbus shad'd in vain. Pope.

2. To glimmer obscurely.

A Romanist, from the very first dawning of any notions in his understanding, hath this principle constantly inculcated, that he must believe as the church. Locke.

3. To begin, yet faintly; to give some promises of lustre or eminence.

While we behold such dauntless worth appear
In dawning youth, and souls to void of fear. Dryden.

Thy hand strikes out some free design,
When life awakes and dawns at every line. Pope.

DAWN. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The time between the first appearance of light and the sun's rise, reckoned from the time that the sun comes within eighteen degrees of the horizon.

Then on to-morrow's dawn your care employ
To search the land, but give this day to joy. Dryden.

2. Beginning; first rise.

These tender circumstances diffuse a dawn of serenity over the soul. Pope.

Such their guiltless passion was,
As in the dawn of time inform'd the heart
Of innocence and undissolving truth. Thomson.

DAY. n. f. [day, Saxon.]

1. The time between the rising and setting of the sun, called the artificial day.

Why stand ye here all the day idle? Matthew.

Of night impatient, we demand the day;

The day arrives, then for the night we pray:

The night and day successively come and go,

Our lasting pains no interruption know. Blackw.

Our object now

Casual discourse draws on, which intermits
Our day's work. Milton.

2. The time from noon to noon, or from midnight to midnight, called the natural day.

How many hours bring about the day,
How many days will finish up the year. Shak.

3. Light; sunshine.

Let us walk honestly, as in the day; not in rioting and drunkenness. Romans.

The west yet gommiers with some streaks of day

Now spurs the lated traveller apace,
To gain the timely inn. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Around the fields old rattle lightning plays,
Which offer'd us by fire, and smitten'd the day.

Mind this was heard the shrill and tender cry
Of well-pleas'd ghosts, which in the storm did fly. Dryden.

Yet are we able only to survey Drawings of beams, and promises of day. Prior.

4. Any time specified and distinguished from other time; an age; the time. In this sense it is generally plural.

After him reigned Gutheine his heir,

The justest man and truest in his days. F. Queen.

I think, in these days, one honest man is obliged to acquaint another who are his friends. Pope.

We have, at this time of day, better and more certain means of information than they had. Woodward.

5. Life: in this sense it is commonly plural. He never in his days broke his sword; that is, in his whole life.

He was never at a loss in his days for a frequent answer. Carter's Life of Ormsby.

6. The day of contest; the contest; the battle.

His name struck fear, his conduct won the day;
He came, he saw, he conquer'd the struggling prey. Rej. success.

DAY

The noble thames do bravely in the war;
The day almost itself professes yours,
And little it to do. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Would you th' advantage of the fight delay,
If, striking first, you were to win the day?
Dryden.

7. An appointed or fixed time.

Or if my debtors do not keep their day,
Deny their hands, and then refuse to pay,
I wait with patience all the terms attend. Dryd.

8. A day appointed for some commemoration.

The field of Agincourt, Fought on the day of Cyprian Crispianus. Shak.

9. From day to day; without certainty or continuance.

DEAN. n. f. [decanus, Latin; doyen, French. From the Greek word δῆμα; in English, ten; because he was anciently set over ten canons or prebendaries at least in some cathedral church. Ax-liffe.]

The second dignity of a diocese.

As there are two foundations of cathedral churches in England, the old and the new (the new are those which Henry VIII. upon suppression of abbies transformed from abbot or prior, and convent, to dean and chapter) to there are two means of creating these deans; for those of the old foundation are brought to their dignity much like bishops, the king first sending out his commissarius to the chapter, the chapter then choosing and the bishop confirming them, and giving his mandate to install them. Those of the new foundation are, by a shorter course, installed by virtue of the king's letters patent, without either election or confirmation.

This word is also applied to divers, that are chief of certain peculiar churches or chapels; as the dean of the king's chapel, the dean of the Archer, the dean of St. George's chapel at Windsor, and the dean of Bocking in Essex. Cowell.

The dean and canons, or prebends, of cathedral churches, were of great use in the church; they were not only to be of counsel with the bishop for his revenue, but chiefly for government in causes ecclesiastical. Use your best means to prefer such to those places who are fit for that purpose. Daven.

general: but decence and gracefulness can be only in the particulars in doing the good. Sprat.

Were the offices of religion strict of all the external decencies of worship, they would not make a due impression on the minds of those who assist at them. Atterbury.
She speaks, behaves, and acts just as she ought;
But never, never reach'd one gen'rous thought:
Virtue she finds too painful an endeavour,
Content to dwell in decencies for ever. Pope.

2. Suitableness to character; propriety.
And must I own, the said, my secret smart,
What with more decence were in silence kept?
Dryden.

The consideration immediately subsequent to the being of a thing, is what agrees or disagrees with that thing; what is suitable or unsuitable to it; and from this springs the notion of decency or indecency, that which becomes or misbecomes.

Sentiments which raise laughter, can very seldom be admitted with any decency into an heroic poem. Addison.

3. Modesty; not ribaldry; not obscenity.

And deeds could only deeds unjust maintain. Dryden.

The same had not consented to the council and deed. Luke.

We are not secluded from the expectation of reward for our charitable deeds. Smalridge.

2. Exploit; performance.

I, on the other side,
Us'd no ambition to commend my deeds;
The deeds themselves, tho' mute, spoke loud the doer. Milton.

Thousands were there, in darker fame that dwell,
Whole deeds some nobler poem shall adorn. Dryden.

3. Power of action; agency.

To be with will and deed created free. Milton.

4. A declaratory of an opinion.

They desire, with strange absurdity, that to the same senate it should belong to give full judgment in matter of excommunication, and to absolve whom it pleased them, clean contrary to their own former deeds and oaths. Hosker.

5. Written evidence of any legal act.

The solicitor gave an evidence for a deed, which was impeached to be fraudulent. Bacon.
He builds his house upon the sand, and writes the deeds by which he holds his estate upon the face of a river. South.

6. Fact; reality; the contrary to fiction; whence the word indeed.

O that, as oft I have at Athens seen
The stage arise, and the big clouds descend;

DEE

DEE

So now in very deed I might behold
The pond'rous earth, and all yon marble roof,
Meet like the hands of Jove. Lee's Oedipus.

DEEDLESS. adj. [from deed.] Unactive; without action; without exploits. Speaking in deeds, and deedless in his tongue. Shakespeare.

Infant, he cried, your female discord end,
Ye deedless bastards! and the song attend. Pope.

Dryden.

2. Decision; determination.

3. [In logick.] The explication of the essence of a thing by its kind and difference.

What is man? Not a reasonable animal merely; for that is not an adequate and distinguishing definition.

Bentley.

DEFINITIVE. adj. [definitivus, Lat.] De-terminate; positive; express.

Other authors write often dubiously, even in matters wherein is expected a strict and definitive truth.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

I make haste to the ending and comparing of the whole work, it being indeed the very definitive sum of this art, to distribute usefully and gracefully a well chosen plot.

Warton.

DEFINITIVELY. adv. [from definitive.]

Positively; decisively; expressly.

Definitively thus I answer you:

Your love deserves my thanks; but my desert,

Unmeritable, shuns your high request.

Shakspeare.

Bellarmine saith, because we think that the body of Christ may be in many places at once, locally and visibly; therefore we say and hold,

that the same body may be circumscriptively and definitively in more places at once.

Hall.

That Methuselah was the longest lived of all the children of Adam, we need not grant; nor is it definitively set down by Moses.

Brown.

DEFINITIVENESS. n. f. [from definitive.]

Decisiveness.

DiB.

DEFLAGRABILITY. n. f. [from deflagro,

Lat.] Combustibility; the quality of taking fire, and burning totally away.

We have spent more time than the opinion of the ready deflagrability, if I may so speak, of salt-petre did permit us to imagine.

Boyle.

DEFLAGRABLE. adj. [from deflagro,

Lat.] Having the quality of waiting away wholly in fire, without any remains.

Our chymical oils, supposing that they were exactly pure, yet they would be, as the best spirit of wine is, but the more inflammable and deflagrable.

DEFLAGRATION. n. f. [deflagratio, Lat.]

A term frequently made use of in chymistry, for setting fire to several things in their preparation; as in making Ethiopians with fire, with sal prunelle, and many others. Quincy.

The true reason why paper is not burned by the flame that plays about it, seems to be, that the aqueous part of the spirit of wine, being imbibed by the paper, keeps it so moist, that the flame of the sulphurous parts of the same spirit cannot fall on it; and therefore, when the deflagration is over, you shall always find the paper moist. Boyle.

TO DEFLECT. v. n. [deflecto, Lat.] To turn aside; to deviate from a true course or right line.

At some parts of the Azores the needle deflects not, but lieth in the true meridian: on the other side of the Azores, and this side of the equator, the north point of the needle wheeleth to the west. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

For, did not some from a straight course deflect, They could not meet, they could no world erect. Blackmore.

DEFLECTION. n. f. [deflecto, Lat.]

1. Deviation; the act of turning aside.

Needles incline to the south on the other side of the equator; and at the very line, or middle circle, stand without deflection. Brown.

That whoe kill'd that monster most deform,
Should have mine only daughter to his dame. Spenser.

So spake the griefly terror; and in shape,
So speaking and so threatening, grew tenfold
More dreadful and deform. Milton.

Sight so deform what heart of rock could long Dry-eyed behold? Milton.

DEFORMATION. n. f. [deformatio, Lat.] A defacing; a disfiguring.

DEFORMED. participial adj. Ugly; wanting natural beauty.

DEFORMEDLY. adv. [from deform.] In an ugly manner.

DEFORMEDNESS. n. f. [from deform'd.] Ugliness; a disagreeable form.

DEFORMITY. n. f. [deformatas, Lat.]

1. Ugliness; illfavouredness.

I, in this weak piping time of peace,
Have no delight to pass away the time,
Unless to spy my shadow in the sun,
And decent on mine own deformity. Shakespeare.

Proper deformity seems not in the fiend
So horrid as in woman. Shakespeare.

Where fits deformity to mock my body,
To shape my legs of an unequal size,
To disproportion me in every part. Shakespeare.

Why should not man,
Retaining still divine similitude
In part, from such deformities be free,
And, for his Maker's image sake, exempt? Milton.

2. Ridiculousness; the quality of something worthy to be laughed at, or censured.

In comedy there is somewhat more of the worse likeness to be taken, because it is often to produce laughter, which is occasioned by the sight of some deformity. Dryden.

3. Irregularity; inordinateness.

No glory is more to be envied than that of due reforming either church or state, when deformities are such, that the perturbation and novelty are not like to exceed the benefit of reforming.

DEFORSOR. n. f. [from forsecor, Fr.]

One that overcomes and calls out by force. A law term. Blount.

TO DEFRAUD. v. a. [defraudo, Lat.]

DEMA'IN.

DEME'AN. n. f. [domaine, French.]

DEME'NE.

1. That land which a man holds originally of himself, called dominium by the civilians, and opposed to feodum, or fee, which signifies those that are held of a superior lord. It is sometimes used also for a distinction between those lands that the lord of the manor has in his own hands, or in the hands of his lessee, demised or let upon a rent for a term of years or life, and such other lands appertaining to the said manor as belong to free or copyholders. Philips.

2. Estate in land.

Having now provided A gentleman of noble parentage, Of fair demesnes, youthful, and nobly allied. Shakespeare.

That earldom indeed had a royal jurisdiction and feignory, though the lands of that county in demesne were possessed for the most part by the ancient inheritors. Davies.

3. Land adjoining to the mansion, kept in the lord's own hand.

Those acts for planting forest trees have hitherto been wholly ineffectual, except about the demesnes of a few gentlemen; and even there, in general, very unskilfully made. Swift.

To DEMAND. v. a. [demand, Fr.]

1. To claim; to ask for with authority.

The pound of flesh, which I demand of him, Is dearly bought; 'tis mine, and I will have it. Shakespeare.

2. To question; to interrogate.

And when Uriah was come unto him, David *demand*ed of him how Joab did, and how the people did, and how the war prospered? Samuel.

If any friend of Cæsar's demand why Brutus rose against Cæsar, this is my answer: Not that I loved Cæsar less, but that I loved Rome more. Shakespeare.

Young one, Inform us of thy fortunes; for, it seems, They crave to be *demand*ed. Shakespeare.

The oracle of Apollo being *demand*ed, when the war and misery of Greece shoud have an end, replied, When they would double the altar in Delos, which was of a cubick form. Pacham on Geometry.

3. [In law.] To prosecute in a real action.

DEMA'ND. n. f. [demande, French.]

1. A claim; a challenging; the asking of any thing with authority.

DEM

This matter is by the decree of the watchers, and the demand by the word of the holy ones.

Daniel.

Giving vent, gives life and strength, to our appetites; and he that has the confidence to turn his wishes into demands, will be but a little way from thinking he ought to obtain them.

Locke.

2. A question; an interrogation.

3. The calling for a thing in order to purchase it.

My bookseller tells me, the demand for those my papers increases daily.

Addison.

4. [In law.] The asking of what is due. It hath also a proper signification distinguished from plaint; for all civil actions are pursued either by demands or plaints, and the pursuer is called demandant or plaintiff. There are two manners of demands, the one of deed, the other in law: in deed, as in every præcipe, there is express demand; in law, as every entry in land-distress for rent, taking or seising of goods, and such like acts, which may be done without any words, are demands in law.

Blount.

DEMANDABLE. adj. [from demand.] That may be demanded; requested; asked for.

All fairs demandable, for licence of alienation to be made of lands holden in chief, have been stayed in the way to the hanaper.

Bacon.

Those plain and legible lines of duty requiring us to demean ourselves to God humbly and devoutly, to our governors obediently, and to our neighbours justly, and to ourselves soberly and temperately.

Saunders.

A man cannot doubt but that there is a God; and that, according as he demean himself towards him, he will make him happy or miserable for ever.

Tillotson.

Strephon had long perplex'd his brains, How with so high a nymph he might Demean himself the wedding-night.

Swift.

2. To lessen; to debase; to undervalue.

Now, out of doubt, Antipholis is mad; Else he would never to demean himself.

Shakspeare.

DEM

DEMEANOUR. n. f. [demer, Fr.] Carriage; behaviour.

Of so insupportable a pride he was, that where his deeds might well stir envy, his demeanour did rather breed disdain.

Saunders.

Angels best like us, when we are most like unto them in all parts of decent demeanour.

Hooker.

His gestures fierce

He mark'd, and mad demeanour, then alone, As he suppos'd, all unobserv'd, unseen.

Milton.

Thus Eve, with sad demeanour mock, Ill worthy I.

Milton.

He was of a courage not to be daunted, which was manifested in all his actions, especially in his whole demeanour at Rhee, both at the landing, and upon the retreat.

Clarendon.

DEMURSER, n. f. [demeurer, French; i. e. manere in aliquo loco, vel morari.]

A kind of pause upon a point of difficulty in an action; for, in every action, the controversy consists either in the fact, or in the law: if in the fact, that is tried by the jury; if in law, then is the case plain to the judge, or so hard and rare, as it breedeth just doubt. I call that plain to the judge, wherein he is assured of the law; and in such case the judge with his associates, proceeds to judgment without farther work. But when it is doubtful to him and his associates, then is their stay made, and a time taken, either for the court to think farther upon it, and to agree, if they can; or else for all the justices to meet together in the Chequer-chamber, and, upon hearing that which the serjeants can say of both parts, to advise, and set down as law, whatsoever they conclude firm, without farther remedy. Cowell.

DEN

A prohibition was granted, and hereunto there was a denial. Ascham's Parergon.

DEN, n. f. [ben, Saxon.]

1. A cavern or hollow running horizontally, or with a small obliquity, under ground; distinct from a hole which runs down perpendicularly.

3. To humble; to deject; to sink.

Others depress their own minds, despond at the first difficulty, and conclude that the making any progress in knowledge is above their capacities. Locke.

If we consider how often it breaks the gloom, which is apt to depress the mind, with transient unexpected gleams of joy, one would take care not to grow too wise for so great a pleasure of life. Addison.

Passion can depress or raise

The heavenly, as the human mind. Prior.

DEPRE'SSION. n. f. [depressio, Latin.]

1. The act of pressing down.

Blocks of a rectangular form, if laid one by another in a level row between supporters sustaining the two ends, all the pieces between will necessarily sink by their own gravity; and much more, if they suffer any depression by other weight above them. Watson.

2. The sinking or falling in of a surface.

The beams of light are such subtle bodies, that, in respect of them, even surfaces, that are sensibly smooth, are not exactly so: they have their own degree of roughness, consisting of little protuberances and depressions; and consequently such inequalities may suffice to give bodies different colours, as we see in marble that appears white or black, or red or blue, even when most carefully polished. Boyle.

If the bone be much depressed, and the fissure considerably large, it is then at your choice, whether you will enlarge that fissure, or continue it for the evacuation of the matter, and forbear the use of the trepan; not doubting but a small depression of the bone will either rise, or cast off, by the benefit of nature. Wifemay.

3. The act of humbling; abasement.

Depression of the nobility may make a king more absolute, but less safe. Bacon.

DEPRESSION of an Equation [in algebra]

To DEROGATE. v. n.

1. To detract; to lessen reputation; with from.

We should be injurious to virtue itself, if we did derogate from them whom their industry hath made great. Hooker.

2. To degenerate; to act beneath one's rank, or place, or birth.

Is there no derogation in 't?
—You cannot derogate, my lord. Shakespeare.

DEROGATE. adj. [from the verb.] Degraded; damaged; lessened in value.

Into her womb convey sterility;
Dry up in her the organs of increase,
And from her derogate body never spring
A babe to honour her! Shakespeare's K. Lear.

DEROGATION. n. f. [derogatio, Latin.]

1. The act of weakening or restraining a former law or contract.

It was indeed but a wooing ambassage, with good respects, to entertain the king in good affection; but nothing was done or handled to the derogation of the king's late treaty with the Italians. Bacon.

That which enjoins the deed is certainly God's law; and it is also certain, that the scripture, which allows of the will, is neither the derogation nor relaxation of that law. South.

2. A defamation; detraction; the act of lessening or taking away the honour of any person or thing. Sometimes with to, properly with from.

Which, though never so necessary, they could not easily now admit, without some fear of derogation from their credit; and therefore that which once they had done, they became for ever after resolute to maintain. Hooker.

So surely he is a very brave man, neither is that any thing which I speak to his derogation; for in that I said he is a rugged people, it is no dispraise. Spenser on Ireland.

The wisest princes need not think it any diminution to their greatness, or derogation to their sufficiency, to rely upon counsel. Bacon.

I say not this in derogation to Virgil, neither do I contradict any thing which I have formerly said in his just praise. Dryden.

None of these patriots will think it a derogation from their merit to have it said, that they received many lights and advantages from their intimacy with my lord Somers. Addison.

DEROGATIVE. adj. [derogativus, Latin.] Detracting; lessening the honour of. Not in use.

That spirits are corporeal, seems to me a conceit derogative to himself, and such as he should rather labour to overthrow; yet thereby he establisheth the doctrine of lustitions, amulets, and charms. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

DEROGATORILY. adv. [from derogatory.] In a detracting manner. Dict.

DEROGATORINESS. n. f. [from derogatory.] The act of derogating. Dict.

DEROGATORY. adj. [derogatorius, Lat.] Detracting; that lessens the honour of; dishonourable.

They live and die in their absurdities, passing their days in perverted apprehensions and conceptions of the world, derogatory unto God, and the wisdom of the creation. Brown.

These deputed beings are derogatory from the wisdom and power of the Author of Nature, who doubtless can govern this machine he could create, by more direct and easy methods than employing these subservient divinities. Cheyne.

DERVIS. n. f. [dervis, French.] A Turkish priest, or monk.

Even there, where Christ vouchsaf'd to teach,
Their dervises dare an impostor preach. Sundys.

The dervis at first made some scruple of violating his promise to the dying brachman; but told him, at last, that he could conceal nothing from so excellent a prince. Spektator.

DESCANT. n. f. [discanto, Italian.]

1. A song or tune composed in parts.

Nay, now you are too flat;
And mar the concord with too harsh a descant. Shakespeare.

The wakeful nightingale
All night long her amorous descant sung. Milton.

2. A discourse; a disputation; a disquisition branched out into several divisions or heads. It is commonly used as a word of censure or contempt.

Look you get a prayer-book in your hand,
And stand between two churchmen, good my lord;

For on that ground I'll build a holy discent. Shakespeare.

Kindness would supplant our unkind reportings, and severe descants upon our besinners. Government of the Tongue.

To DE'SCANT. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To sing in parts.

2. To discourse at large; to make speeches: in a sense of censure or contempt.

Why I, in this weak piping time of peace,
Have no delight to pass away the time,
Lest to spy my shadow in the sun,
And defiant on mine own deformity. Shakespeare.
Com'st thou for this, vain hoaster, to survey me,
To defiant on my strength, and give thy verdict? Milton.

A virtuous man should be pleased to find people danting upon his actions, because, when they are thoroughly canvassed and examined, they turn to his honour. Addison.

To DESCEND. v. n. [descendo, Lat.]

1. To go downward; to come from a higher place to a lower; to fall; to sink.

The rain descended, and the floods came,
and the winds blew, and beat upon that house;
and it fell not, for it was founded upon a rock. Matthew.

The brook that descended out of the mount. Deuteronomy.

He cleft his head with one descending blow. Dryden.

Foul with stains
Of gushing torrents and descending rains. Addison.
O goddess! who, descending from the skies,
Vouchsaf'd thy presence to my wond'ring eyes. Pope.

2. To come down, in a popular sense, implying only an arrival at one place from another.

He shall descend into battle, and perish. Sam.

3. To come suddenly or violently; to fall upon as from an eminence.

For the pious fire preserve the son;
His with'd return with happy pow'r befriend,
And on the suitors let thy wrath descend. Pope.

4. To go down: in a figurative sense.

He, with honest meditations fed,
Into himself descended. Milton.

5. To make an invasion.

The goddess gives th' alarm; and soon is known
The Grecian fleet descending on the town. Dryden.
A foreign son upon the shore descends,
Whole martial fame from pole to pole extends. Dryden.

6. To proceed as from an original; to be derived from.

Despair descends from a mean original; the offspring of fear, laziness, and impatience. Collier against Despair.

Will is younger brother to a lunatic, and descended of the ancient family of the Wimbles. Addison.

7. To fall in order of inheritance to a successor.

Should we allow that all the property, all the estate, of the father ought to descend to the eldest son; yet the father's natural dominion, the paternal power, cannot descend unto him by inheritance. Locke.

The inheritance of both rule over men, and property in things, sprung from the same original, and were to descend by the same rules. Locke.

Our author provides for the descending and conveyance down of Adam's monarchical power to posterity, by the inheritance of his heir, succeeding to his father's authority. Locke.

8. To extend a discourse from general to particular considerations.

Congregations discerned the small accord that was among themselves, when they descended to particulars. Gray of Ptolemy.

To DESCEND. v. a. To walk downward upon any place.

He entered, and they both descend the hill;
Descended Adam to the bow'r, where Eve
Lay sleeping. Milton.

In all our journey through the Alps, as well when we climbed as when we descended them, we had still a river running along with the road. Addison.

In the midst of this plain stands a high hill, so very steep, that there would be no mounting or descending it, were not it made up of a loose crumbled earth. Addison.

DESCENDANT. n. s. [descendant, French; descendens, Latin.] The offspring of an ancestor; he that is in the line of generation, at whatever distance.

The descendants of Neptune were planted there. Lucan.

O, true descendant of a patriot line,
Vouchsafe this picture of thy soul to see. Dryden.

He revealed his own will, and their duty, in a more ample manner than it had been declared to any of my descendants before them. Atterbury.

DESCENDENT. adj. [descendens, Latin.]
It seems to be established, that the substantive should derive the termination from the French, and the adjective from the Latin.]

1. Falling; sinking; coming down; descending.

There is a regrefs of the sap in plants from above downwards; and this descending juice is that which principally nourishes both fruit and plant. Ray on the Creation.

2. Proceeding from another, as an original or ancestor.

More than mortal grace
Speaks thee descendant of ethereal race. Pope.

DESCENDIBLE. adj. [from descend.]

1. Such as may be descended; such as may admit of a passage downward.

2. Transmissible by inheritance.

According to the customs of other countries,
those honorary fees and infusions were descen-dible to the eldest, and not to all the males.
Hale's Common Law of England.

DESCENSION. n. s. [descensio, Latin.]

1. The act of going downward, falling, or sinking; descent.

2. A declension; a degradation.
From a god to a bull! a heavy descension:
It was Jove's case. From a prince to a 'pen-tence! a low transformation; that shall be mine. Shakespeare.

3. [In astronomy.] Right descension is the arch of the equator, which descends with the sign or star below the horizon of a direct sphere.

Oblique descension is the arch of the equator, which descends with the sign below the horizon of an oblique sphere. Ozanam.

DESCENSIONAL. adj. [from descension.]
Relating to descent.

DESCENT. n. s. [descensus, Latin; descente, French.]

1. The act of passing from a higher to a lower place.

Why do fragments, from a mountain rent,
Tend to the earth with such a swift descent? Blackmore.

2. Progress downward.

Observing such gradual and gentle descents downwards, in those parts of the creation that are beneath men, the rule of analogy may make it probable, that it is so also in things above. Locke.

3. Obliquity; inclination.

The heads and sources of rivers flow upon a descent, or an inclining plane, without which they could not flow at all. Woodward.

4. Lowest place.

From th' extremest upward of thy head
To the descent and dust below thy feet. Shak.

5. Fall from a higher state; degradation.

O soul descent, that I, who erst contended
With gods to sit the highest, am now confin'd
Into a beast, and mix with bestial slime
This essence to incarnate and unbrute. Milton.

6. Invasion; hostile entrance into a kingdom; in allusion to the height of ships.

At the first descent on shore, he was not im-mured with a wooden vessel, but he did countenance the landing in his long-boat. Wotton.

The duke was general himself, and made that unfortunate descent upon the Isle of Rhé, which was attended with a miserable retreat, in which the flower of the army was lost. Clarendon.

Arise, true judges, in your own defence,
Controul those soplings, and declare for sense;
For, should the fools prevail, they stop not there,
But make their next descent upon the fair. Dryden.

7. Transmission of any thing by succession and inheritance.

If the agreement and consent of men first gave a sceptre into any one's hand, that also must direct its descent and conveyance. Locke.

8. The state of proceeding from an original or progenitor.

All of them, even without such a particular claim, had great reason to glory in their common descent from Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, to whom the promise of the blessed seed was severally made. Atterbury.

9. Birth; extraction; process of lineage.

I give my voice on Richard's side,
To bar my master's heirs in true descent!
God knows, I will not do it. Shakespeare.
Turnus, for high descent and graceful mien,
Was first, and favour'd by the Latian queen. Dryden.

10. Offspring; inheritors; those proceeding in the line of generation.

The care of our descent perplexes us most,
Which must be born to certain woe. Milton.
From him

His whole descent, who thus shall: Canaan win. Milton.

11. A single step in the scale of genealogy; a generation.

No man living is a thousand descents removed from Adam himself. Hooker.
Then all the sons of these five brethren reign'd,
By due success, and all their nephews late,
Even thrice eleven descents the crown retain'd,
Till aged Heli by due heritage it gain'd. Fairy Queen.

12. A rank in the scale of subordination.

How have I then with whom to hold converse,
Save with the creatures which I made, and those
To me inferior; infinite descents
Beneath what other creatures are to thee? Milton.

To DESCRIBE. v. a. [describo, Lat.]

1. To delineate; to mark out; to trace; as a torch waved about the head describes a circle.

2. To mark out any thing by the mention of its properties.

I pray thee, overname them; and as thou nam'st them, I will describe them; and according to my description, level at my affection. Shakespeare.

He that writes well in verse will often lend his thoughts in search, through all the treasure of words that express any one idea in the same language, that so he may comport with the measures of the rhyme, or with his own most beautiful and vivid sentiments of the thing he describes. Watts.

3. To distribute into proper heads or divisions.

Men pass'd through the land, and described it by cities into seven parts in a book. Joshua.

4. To define in a lax manner by the promiscuous mention of qualities general and peculiar. See DESCRIPTION.

DESCRIBER. n. s. [from describe.] He that describes.

From a plantation and colony, an island near Spain was by the Greek describers named Erythra. Brown.

DESCRIBER. n. f. [from the verb.] A discoverer; a detector.

The glad describer that not miss
To taste the nectar of a kiss. Craut.

DESCRIPTION. n. f. [descriptio, Lat.]

1. The act of delineating or expressing any person or thing by perceptible properties.

2. The sentence or passage in which any thing is described.

A poet must refuse all tedious and unnecessary descriptions: a robe which is too heavy, is less an ornament than a burthen. Dryden.

Sometimes, misguided by the tuneful throng,
I look for streams immortaliz'd in song,
That lost in silence and oblivion lie,
Dumb are their fountains, and their channel dry,
That run for ever by the muse's skill,
And in the smooth description murmur still. Addison.

3. A lax definition.

The sort of definition, which is made up of a mere collection of the most remarkable parts or properties, is called an imperfect definition, or a description; whereas the definition is called perfect, when it is composed of the essential difference, added to general nature or genus. Watts.

4. The qualities expressed in a description.

I'll pay six thousand, and deface the bond,
Before a friend of this description
Shall lose a hair. Shakespeare.

TO DESCRIVE. v. a. [descriere, Fr.]

1. To give notice of any thing suddenly discovered: as, the scout descried the enemy, or gave notice of their approach. This sense is now obsolete, but gave occasion to those which are now in use.

2. To spy out; to examine at a distance.
And the house of Joseph sent to descrie Bethel. Juices.

Edmund, I think, is gone to descrie
The strength o' th' enemy. Shakespeare.
Our merchants, to their great charges, set forth fleets to descrie the seas. Alibab.

3. To detect; to find out any thing concealed.

Of the king they got a fight after dinner in a gallery, and of the queen mother at her own table; in neither place descried, no, not by Cadindet, who had been lately ambassador in England. Watson.

4. To discover; to perceive by the eye; to see any thing distant or obscure.

Thus tight, into the court he took his way;
Both through the guard, which never him descried,
And through the watchmen, who him never spied. Hubbard's Tale.

The spirit of deep prophecy she hath;
What's past, and what's to come she can descrie. Shakespeare.

That planet would, unto our eyes, descrie
only that part whereon the light falls, appear to be horned, as the moon seems. Raleigh.

And now their way to earth they had descried,
To Paradise first tending. Milton.

Although the motion of light be not descried, no argument can be made from thence to prove that light is not a body. D.ghy.

A tow'r so high, it seem'd to reach the sky,
Stood on the roof, from whence we could descrie
All them. Dentham.

Once more at least look back, laid I;
Thyself in that large glass descrie. Prior.

DESCRY. n. f. [from the verb.] Discovery; thing discovered.

How near 's the other army?

—Near, and on speedy foot, the main desery
Stands in the hourly thought. Shakespeare.

TO DESECRATE. v. a. [desecro, Lat.] To divert from the purpose to which any thing is consecrated.

The founders of monasteries imprecated evil on those who should desecrate their donations. Salmon's Sursey.

DESECRATION. n. f. [from desecrate.] The abolition of consecration.

DESERT. n. f. [desertum, Lat.] A wilderness; solitude; waste country; uninhabited place.

Be alive again,
And dare me to the desert with thy sword.
If trembling I inhibit, then protest me
The baby of a girl. Shakespeare.
He, looking round on every side, beheld
A pathless desert, dark with horrid shades. Milton.

DESERT. adj. [desertus, Latin.] Wild; waste; solitary; uninhabited; uncultivated; untill'd.

I have words
That would be howl'd out in the desert air,
Where hearing should not catch them. Shaksp.
He found him in a desert land, and in the waste howling wilderness. Dante's Comedy.

The promises and bargains between two men in a desert island are binding to them, though they are perfectly in a state of nature, in reference to one another. Locke.

TO DESERT. v. a. [deserter, French; desero, Latin.]

1. To forsake; to fall away from; to quit meanly or treacherously.

I do not remember one man, who heartily wished the passing of that bill, that ever deserted them till the kingdom was in a flame. Dryden.

2. To leave; to abandon.

What is it that holds and keeps the orbs in fixed stations and intervals, against an incessant and inherent tendency to desert them? Bentley.

3. To quit the army, or regiment, in which one is enlisted.

DESERT. n. f. [properly desert: the word is originally French.] The last course; the fruit or sweetmeats with which a feast is concluded. See DESERT.

DESERT. n. f. [from deserve.]

1. Qualities or conduct considered with respect to rewards or punishments; degree of merit or demerit.

Being of necessity a thing common, it is, through the manifold persuasions, dispositions, and occasions of men, with equal desert both of praise and dispraise, shunned by some, by others desired. Hosker.

The base o' th' mount
Is rank'd with all deserts, all kind of natures,
That labour on the bosom of this sphere
To propagate their states. Shakespeare.
Use every man after his desert, and who shall
'scape whipping? Shakespeare.

2. Proportional merit; claim to reward.

All desert imports an equality between the good conferred, and the good deserved, or made due. South.

3. Excellence; right of reward; virtue.

More to move you,
Take my deserts to his, and join them both. Shakespeare.

DESERTER. n. f. [from desert.]

1. He that has forsaken his cause or his post: commonly in an ill sense.

The members of both houses, who at first withdrew, were counted deserters, and oust'd of their places in parliament. King Charles.

Straight to their ancient cells, recall'd from.

air,
The reconcil'd deserters will repair. Dryden.
Hosts of deserters, who your honour sold,
And safely broke your faith for bribes of gold. Dryden.

2. He that leaves the army in which he is enlisted.

They are the same deserters, whether they stay in our own camp, or run over to the enemy's. Decay of Piety.

A deserter, who came out of the citadel, says the garrison is brought to the utmost necessity. Taylor.

3. He that forsakes another; an abandoner.

The fair sex, if they had the deserter in their power, would certainly have shewn him more mercy than the Bæthnals did Orpheus. Dryden.

Thou, false guardian of a charge too good,
Thou mean deserter of thy brother's blood. Pope.

DESERTION. n. f. [from desert.]

1. The act of forsaking or abandoning a cause or post.

Every compliance that we are persuaded to by one, is a contradiction to the commands of the other; and our adherence to one, will necessarily involve us in a desertion of the other. Rogers.

2. [In theology.] Spiritual despondency; a sense of the dereliction of God; an opinion that grace is withdrawn.

Christ hears and sympathizes with the spiritual agonies of a soul under desertion, or the preludes of some stinging affliction. South.

DESERTLESS. adj. [from desert.] Without merit; without claim to favour or reward.

She said the lov'd,
Lov'd me desertless; who with shame confess,
Another flame had seiz'd upon my breast. Dryd.

TO DESERVE. v. a. [deservoir, Fr.] To be worthy of either good or ill.

Those they honoured, as having power to work or cease, as men deserved of them. Hosker.
Some of us love you well; and even those some Envy your great deservings, and good name. Shakespeare.

All friends shall taste
The wages of their virtue, and all foes
The cup of their deservings. Shakespeare.
What he deserves of you and me I know. Shakespeare.

Yet well, if here would end
The misery: I deserve it, and would bear
My own deservings. Milton.

A mother cannot give him death: though he deserve it, he deserves it not from me. Dryden.
Since my Orazia's death I have not seen
A beauty so deserving to be queen. Dryden.

TO DESERVE. v. n. To be worthy of reward.

According to the rule of natural justice, one man may merit and deserve of another. South.
Courts are the places where best manners flourish.

Where the deserving ought to rise. Ottaway.
He had been a person of great deservings from the republick, was an admirable speaker, and very popular. Swift.

DESERVEDLY. adv. [from deserve.] Worthily; according to desert, whether of good or evil.

For him I was not sent, nor yet to free
That people victor once, now vile and base, Deservedly made vassal. Milton.

A man deservedly cuts himself off from the affections of that community which he endeavours to subvert. Addison.

DESERVER. n. f. [from deserve.] A man who merits rewards. It is used, I think, only in a good sense.

Their love is never link'd to the deserver,
Till his desert is paid. Shakspeare.

Heavy, with some minds, is an overweight of obligation; or otherwise great deservers
o, perchance, grow intolerable p.ciumers.

Watson.

Emulation will never be wanting amongst poets, when particular rewards and prizes are proposed to the best deservers. Dryden.

DESICCANTS. n. f. [from desiccate.] Applications that dry up the flow of forces;
driers.

This, in the beginning, may be prevented by desiccants, and waited. Wifeman.

TO DESICCATE. v. a. [desiccato, Lat.]

1. To dry up; to exhaust of moisture.

In bodies desiccated by heat or age, when the native spirit goeth forth, and the moisture with it, the air with time getteth into the pores. Haven.

Seminal ferments were elevated from the sea, or some desiccated places thereof, by the heat of the sun. Hale.

2. To exhale moisture.

Where there is moisture enough, or superfluous, there wine helpeth to digest and desiccate
the moisture. Bacon.

DESICCATION. n. f. [from desiccate.]

The act of making dry; the state of being dried.

If the spirits issue out of the body, there fol-loweth desiccation, induration, and consumption.
Bacon.

DESICCATIVE. adj. [from desiccate.]

That has the power of drying.

TO DESIDERATE. v. a. [desidero, Lat.]

To want; to miss; to desire in absence.
A word scarcely used.

Eclipses are of wonderful assistance toward the solution of this so desirable and so much desiderated problem. Cheyne.

DESIDERATUM. [Latin.] Somewhat which inquiry has not yet been able to settle or discover; as, the longitude is the desideratum of navigation. The tri-section of an angle, and the quadrature of a circle, are the desiderata of geometry.

DESIDIOSE. adj. [desidiosus, Lat.] Idle;
lazy; heavy. DiA.

TO DESIGN. v. a. [designo, Lat. designer,
French.]

1. To purpose; to intend any thing.

2. To form or order with a particular purpose; with for.

The acts of religious worship were purposely designed for the acknowledgment of a Being, whom the most excellent creatures are bound to adore as well as we. Stillington.

You are not for obscurity design'd,
But, like the sun, must cheer all human kind.

Dryden.

3. To devote intentionally: with to.

One of those places was designed by the old man to his son. Clarendon.

He was born to the inheritance of a splendid fortune: he was designed to the study of the law.
Dryden.

4. To plan; to project; to form in idea.

We are to observe whether the picture or outlines be well drawn, or, as more elegant artizans term it, well designed; then, whether it be well coloured; which be the two general heads.

Watson.

Thus while they speed their pace, the prince designs

The new elected seat, and draws the lines. Dryd.

5. To mark out by particular tokens.
Little used.

'Tis not enough to make a man a subject, to convince him that there is regal power in the world; but there must be ways of designing and knowing the person to whom this regal power of right belongs. Locke.

DESIGN. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. An intention; a purpose.

2. A scheme; a plan of action.

Is he a prudent man, as to his temporal estate,
that lays design only for a day, without any prospect to the remaining part of his life? Tillotson.

3. A scheme formed to the detriment of another.

A sedate settled design upon another man's life, put him in a state of war with him against whom he has declared such an intention. Locke.

4. The idea which an artist endeavours to execute or express.

I doubt not but in the design of several Greek medals, one may often see the hand of an Apelles or Protogenes. Addison.

Thy hand strikes out some new design,
Where life awakes and dawns at every line. Pope.

DESIGNABLE. adj. [designo, Latin.]

Distinguishable; capable to be particularly marked out.

The power of all natural agents is limited:
the mover must be confined to observe these proportions, and cannot pass over all their infinite designable degrees in an instant. Dugli.

DESIGNATION. n. f. [designatio, Lat.]

1. The act of pointing or marking out by some particular token.

This is a plain designation of the duke of Marlborough: one kind of stuff used to fatten land is called marle, and every body knows that borough is a name for a town. Savoy.

2. Appointment; direction.

William the Conqueror forbore to use that claim in the beginning, but mixed it with a private pretence, grounded upon the will and designation of Edward the Confessor. Bacon.

3. Import; intention.

Finite and infinite seem to be looked upon by the mind as the modes of quantity, and to be attributed primarily in their first designation only to those things which have parts, and are capable of increase or diminution. Locke.

DESIGNEDLY. adv. [from design.] Purposely; intentionally; by design or purpose; not ignorantly; not inadvertently; not fortuitously.

Uses made things; that is to say, some things were made designedly, and on purpose, for such an use as they serve to. Ray on the Creation.

The next thing is sometimes designedly to put children in pain; but care must be taken that this be done when the child is in good humour.
Locke.

DESIGNER. n. f. [from design.]

1. One that designs, intends, or purposes;
a purposer.

2. A plotter; a contriver; one that lays schemes.

It has therefore always been both the rule and practice for such designers to suborn the publick interest, to countenance and cover their private.
Decay of Piety.

3. One that forms the idea of any thing in painting or sculpture.

There is a great affinity between designing and poetry: for the Latin poets, and the designers of the Roman medals, lived very near one another, and were bred up to the same reith for wit and fancy. Addison.

DESIGNING. participial adj. [from design.]

Insidious; treacherous; deceitful; frau-dulently artful.

'Twould shew me poor, indebted, and compell'd,

Designing, mercenary; and I know

You would not wish to think I could be bought.

out intention; without design; unknow-ing; inadvertent.

DESIGNLESSLY. adv. [from designless.] Without intention; ignorantly; inadvertently.

In this great concert of his whole creation, the designlessly conspiring voices are as differing as the conditions of the respective fingers. Boyle.

DESIGNMENT. n. f. [from design.]

1. A purpose and intent.

The sanctity of the christian religion excludes fraud and falsehood from the designments and aims of its first promulgators. Decay of Piety.

'Tis a greater credit to know the ways of captivating nature, and making her subserve our purposes and designments, than to have learned all the intrigues of policy. Glanville.

2. A scheme of hostility.

News, birds! our wars are done!

The desperate tempest hath so bang'd the Turks,
That their designment halts. Shakspeare.

She received advice both of the king's deprecate estate, and of the duke's designments against her. Heyward.

3. The idea, or sketch, of a work.

The scenes which represent cities and countries are not really such, but only painted on boards and canvass; but shall that excuse the ill painture or designment of them? Dryden.

When absent, yet we conquer'd in his right;
For though that some mean artist's skill were shown
In mingling colours, or in placing light,
Yet still the fair designment was his own.

Dryden.

DESIRABLE. adj. [from desire.]

1. That is to be wished with earnestness.

Adjudged cases, collected by men of great sagacity, will improve his mind toward acquiring this desirable amplitude and extent of thought.

Watts.

He cannot but confess, that it is a thing the most desirable to man, and most agreeable to the goodness of God, that he should send forth his light and his truth by a special revelation of this will. Rogers.

2. Pleasing; delightful.

She then let drop some expressions about an agate snuff-box: I immediately took the hint, and bought one; being unwilling to omit any thing that might make me desirable in her eyes.

Addison.

Our own sex, our kindred, our houses, and our very names, seem to have something good and desirable in them. Watts.

DESIRE. n. f. [desir, Fr. desio, Ital.

desiderium, Lat.] With; eagerness to obtain or enjoy.

Desire is the uneasiness a man finds in himself upon the absence of any thing, whose present enjoyment carries the idea of delight with it.

Locke.

Drink provokes, and unprovokes; it provokes the desire, but it takes away the performance. Shakspeare.

Desire's the vast extent of human mind;
It mounts above, and leaves poor hope behind.

Dryden.

It is in a man's power only to observe what the ideas are that take their turns in his understanding, or else to direct the fort, and call in such as he hath a desire or use of. Locke.

TO DESIRE. v. a. [desirer, French;
desiderare, Latin.]

1. To wish; to long for; to covet.

Thou shalt not desire the silver or gold.

Dant.

Thunders the sport of those, who with the gun,
And dog impatient bounding at the thor,
Worse than the seasons desolate the fields. Thomson.
 - DESOLATELY. adv. [from desolate.] In a desolate manner.
 - DESOLATION. n. f. [from desolate.]
 - Destruction of inhabitants; reduction to solitude.
What with your praises of the country, what with your discourse of the lamentable desolation thereof made by those Scots, you have filled me with a great composition. Spenser.
Without her follows to my self and thee,
Herself, the land, and many a christian soul,
Death, desolation, ruin, and decay. Shaksp.
 - Gloominess; sadness; melancholy; debilitation.
That dwelling place is unnatural to mankind; add to the terrors of the continual motion, the desolation of the far being from comfort, the eye and the ear having ugly images before it, doth still vex the mind, even when it is best armed against it. Sidney.
Then your base shall be ungartered, and every thing about you demonstrate a careless desolation. Shakespeare.
My desolation does begin to make
A better life. Shakespeare.
To complete
The scene of desolation, stretch'd around
The grim guards stand. Thomson.
 - A place wasted and forsaken.
How is Babylon become a desolation among the nations! Jer.
- DESPAIR. n. f. [desespoir, French.]
- Hopelessness; despondence; loss of hope.
Despair is the thought of the unattainableness of any good, which works differently in men's minds: sometimes producing uneasiness or pain, sometimes rest and indolency.
You had either never attempted this change, set on with hope; or never discovered it, flipp'd with despair. Sidney.
We are troubled on every side, yet not distressed; we are perplexed, but not in despair. 2 Cor.
Wearied, forsaken, and pursued at last,
All safety in despair of safety plac'd,
Contagion thence returns, resolv'd to hear
All their assaults, succumb in vain to fear. Denham.
Equal their flame, unequal was their care;
One lov'd with hope, one languish'd with despair. Dryden.
 - That which causes despair; that of which there is no hope.
Strangely visited people,
All swollen and ulcerous, pituit to the eye;
The more despair of surgery, he cures;
Hanging a golden stamp about their necks,
Put on with holy prayers. Shakespeare.
 - [In theology.] Loss of confidence in the mercy of God.
Are not all or most evangelical virtues and graces in danger of extremes? As there is, God knows, too often a defect on the one side, so there may be an excess on the other: may not hope in God, or godly sorrow, be perverted into presumption or despair? Spratt.
- TO DESPAIR. v. n. [despero, Latin.] To be without hope; to despond: with of before a noun.

- Though thou drewest a sword at thy friend yet despair not; for there may be a turning. Eccles.

What, are the brothers parted?
—They have despatch'd with Pompey; he is gone. Shakespeare.
- DESPA'TCH. n. f. [from the verb.]
- Hasty execution; speedy performance.
A despatch is one of the most dangerous things to business that can be. Bacon.
You'd see, could you her inward motions watch,
Feigning delay, she wishes for despatch;
Then to a woman's meandering would you look,
Then read her backward. Granville.
The despatch of a good office is very often as beneficial to the solicitor as the good office itself. Adelphi.
 - Conduct; management. Obsolete.
You shall put
This night's great business into my despatch,
Which shall, to all our nights and days to come,
Give solely sovereign sway and masterdom. Shakespeare.
 - Express; hasty messenger or message: as, despatches were sent away.

DES

DESPATCHFUL. adj. [from despatch.]
Bent on haste; intent on speedy execution of business.

So saying, with despatchful looks in haste
She turns, on hospitable thoughts intent. Milton.

Let one despatchful bid some swain to lead
A well-fed bullock from the grassy mead. Pope.

DESPERATE. adj. [desperatus, Latin.]

Since his exile the hath despis'd me most;
Forsworn my company, and rail'd at me,
That I am desperate of obtaining her. Shaksp.

2. Without care of safety; rash; precipitant; fearless of danger.

Can you think, my lord,
That any Englishman dare give me counsel,
Or be a known friend 'gainst his highness' pleasure,
Though he be grown so desperate to be honest,
And live a subject? Shaksp.

He who goes on without any care or thought of reforming, (such an one we vulgarly call a desperate person, and that sure is a most damning sin. Hammond.

3. Irrecoverable; unfurmountable; irrecoverable.

These debts may be well called desperate ones; for a mad man owes them. Shaksp.

In a part of Asia the sick, when their case comes to be thought desperate, are carried out and laid on the earth, before they are dead, and left there. Locke.

I am a man of desperate fortunes, that is, a man whose friends are dead; for I never aimed at any other fortune than in friends. Pope to Swift.

4. Mad; hotbrained; furious.

Were it not the part of a desperate physician to with his friend dead, rather than to apply the best endeavours of his skill for his recovery?
Spenser's State of Ireland.

5. It is sometimes used in a sense nearly ludicrous, and only marks any bad quality predominating in a high degree.

Concluding all mere desperate fops and fools,
That durst depart from Aristotle's rules. Pope.

DESPERATELY. adv. [from desperate.]

1. Furiously; madly; without attention to safety or danger.

Your eldest daughters have foredone themselves,
And desperately are dead. Shaksp.

There might be somewhat in it, that he would not have done, or desired undone, when he broke forth as desperately as before he had done uncivily. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. In a great degree; violently: this sense is ludicrous.

She fell desperately in love with him, and took a voyage into Sicily in pursuit of him. Addison.

DESPERATENESS. n. f. [from desperate.]

Madness; fury; precipitance.

The going on not only in terrours and amazement of conscience, but also boldly, hopefully, confidently, in wilful habits of sin, is called a desperateness also; and the more bold than the mere desperate. Hammond.

DESPERATION. n. f. [from desperate.]

Hopelessness; despair; dependency.

Desperation
Is all the policy, strength, and defence,
That Rome can make against them. Shaksp.

As long as we are guilty of any past sin, and have no promise of remission, whatever our future care be, this desperation of success chills all our industry, and we sin on because we have sinned. Hammond.

DESPICABLE. adj. [despicabilis, Lat.]

Contemptible; vile; mean; sordid;

DES

worthless. It is applied equally to persons or things.

Our case were miserable, if that wherewith we most endeavour to please God were in his light so vile and despicable as men's disdainful speech would make it. Hooker.

Their heads as low
Bow'd down in battle, sunk before the spears
Of despicable foes. Milton.

All the earth he gave thee to possess and rule,
No despicable gift. Milton.

Not less ev'n in this despicable hero,
Than when my name shook Atreus with affright,
And froze your hearts beneath your torrid zone. Dryden.

All the quiet that could be expected from such a reign, must be the result of absolute power on the one hand, and a despicable slavery on the other. Addison.

When men of rank and figure pass away their lives in criminal pursuits and practices, they render themselves more vile and despicable than any innocent man can be, whatever low station his fortune and birth have placed him in. Addison.

DESPICABLENESS. n. f. [from despicable.] Meanness; vileness; worthles-
ness.

We consider the great disproportion between the infinity of the reward and the despicableness of our service. Decay of Piety.

DESPICABLY. adv. [from despicable.]
Meanly; sordidly; vilely.

Here wanton Naples crowns the happy shore,
Nor vainly rich, nor despicably poor;
The town in soft solemnities delights,
And gentle poets to her arms invites. Addison.

DESPISABLE. adj. [from despise.] Contemptible; despicable; regarded with contempt. A word scarcely used but in low conversation.

I am obliged to you for taking notice of a poor old distressed courtier, commonly the most despicable thing in the world. Arbutnot to Pope.

TO DESPISE. v. a. [despiser, old French, Skinner; despicio, Latin.]

heathen, and despised among men. Jer.

My sons their old unhappy fire despise,
Spoil'd of his kingdom, and depriv'd of eyes. Pope.

2. In Shakspere it seems once to signify abhor, as from the Italian despettare.

Let not your ears despise my tongue for ever,
Which shall possess them with the heaviest sound
That ever yet they heard. Shakspere.

DESPISER. n. f. [from despise.] Con-temner; scorner.

Art thou thus bolden'd, man, by thy distress,
Or else a rude despiser of good manners,
That in civility thou seem'st so empty? Shakspere.

Wisdom is commonly, at long running, out-sided even of her despisers. Grov. of Tongue.

Thus the atheists, libertines, and despisers of religion, usually pass under the name of free-thinkers. Swift.

DESPITE. n. f. [spijt, Dutch; dépit,
French.]

1. Malice; anger; malignity; maliciousness; spleen; hatred.

Thou wretch! despite o'erwhelm thee! Shaksp.

With men these considerations are usually the causes of despise, disdain, or aversion from others; but with God they pass for reasons of our greater tenderness towards others. Spratt.

2. Defiance; unobdured opposition.

The life, thou gav'st me first, was lost and done;

DES

Till with thy warlike sword, despite of fate,
To my determin'd time thou gav'st a new date. Shakspere.

My life thou shalt command, but not my name:

The one my duty owes; but my fair name,
Despite of death, that lives upon my grave,
To dark dishonour's use thou shalt not have. Shakspere.

Know I will serve the fair in thy despite. Dryden.

I have not quitted yet a victor's right;
I'll make you happy in your own despite. Dryden.

Say, would the tender creature, in despite
Of heat by day, and chilling dews by night,
Its life maintain? Blackmore.

Thou, with rebel insolence, didst dare
To own and to protect that hoary ruffian;
And, in despite ev'n of thy father's justice,
To stir the factious rabble up to arms. Rowe.

3. Act of malice; act of opposition.

His punishment eternal misery,
It would be all his solace and revenge,
As a despite done against the Most High,
Thou once to gain companion of his woe. Mt.

TO DESPISE. v. a. [from the noun.]

To vex; to offend; to disappoint; to give uneasiness to.

Saturn, with his wife Rhea, fled by night;
Setting the town on fire, to despite Bacchus. Raleigh.

DESPITEFUL. adj. [despite and full.]

Malicious; full of spleen; full of hate; malignant; mischievous: used both of persons and things.

I, his despiteful Juno, sent him forth
From courtly friends with camping foes to live,
Where death and danger dog the heels of worth. Shakspere.

Preserve us from the hands of our despiteful, and deadly enemies. King Charles.

Meanwhile the heinous and despiteful act
Of Satan, done in Paradise, was known In heav'n. Milton.

DESPITEFULLY. adv. [from despiteful.]
Maliciously; malignantly.

Pray for them that despitefully use you and persecute you. Matthew.

DESPITEFULNESS. n. f. [from despite-ful.] Malice; hate; malignity.

Let us examine him with despitefulness and torture, that we know his meekness, and prove his patience. Wisdom.

DESPITEOUS. adj. [from despite.] Malicious; furious. Out of use.

The knight of the red-cross, when him he spied

Spurring so hot with rage despiteous,
'Gan fairly couch his spear. Fairy Queen.

Turning despiteous torture out of door. Shakspere.

DESPITEOUSLY. adv. [from despiteous.]

In a furious manner. Not in use.

The mortal steel despiteously entail'd
Deep in their flesh, quite thro' the iron walls,
That a large purple stream adown their grim-beaux falls. Spenser.

To intercept thy way, or send thee back

Despoil'd of innocence, of faith, of bliss. Milton.

He, pale as death, despoil'd of his array,
Into the queen's apartment takes his way. Dryden.

Ev'n now thy aid,
Eugene, with regiments unequal press,

Awaits: this day of all his honours gain'd
Despails him, if thy succour opportune
Defends not the sad hour. Philips.

2. To divest by any accident.

These formed stones, despoiled of their shells, and exposed upon the surface of the ground, in time moulder away. Wardour.

Lat.] The act of despoiling or stripping.

TO DESPOND. v. a. [despondeo, Lat.]

1. To despair; to lose hope; to become hopeless or desperate.

It is every man's duty to labour in his calling,
and not to despond for any miscarriages or disappointments that were not in his own power to prevent. L'Estrange.

There is no surer remedy for superstitious and desponding weakness, than first to govern ourselves by the best improvement of that reason which providence has given us for a guide; and then, when we have done our own parts, to commit all cheerfully, for the rest, to the good pleasure of heaven, with trust and resignation.
L'Estrange.

Physick is their bane:

The learned leaches in despair depart,
And shake their heads, desponding of their art.
Dryden.

Others depreß their own minds, despond at the first difficulty; and conclude, that making any progress in knowledge, farther than serves their ordinary business, is above their capacities.
Locke.

2. [In theology.] To lose hope of the divine mercy.

He considers what is the natural tendency of such a virtue, or such a vice: he is well apprized that the representation of some of these things may convince the understanding, some may terrify the conscience, some may allure the fleshful, and some encourage the desponding mind.
Watts.

DESPO'NDENCY. n. f. [from despondent.]

Despair; hopelessness; desperation.

DESPO'NDENT. adj. [despondens, Lat.]

Despairing; hopeless; without hope.

It is well known, both from ancient and modern experience, that the very boldest atheists, out of their debauches and company, when they chance to be surpris'd with solitude or sickness, are the most suspicious, timorous, and despondent
wretches in the world. Bentley.

Congregated thrushes, linnets, fit

On the dead tree, a dull despondent flock.
Thomson.

TO DESPONSATE. v. a. [desponso,

other.

DESPOT. n. f. [despotes, Gr.] An absolute prince; one that governs with unlimited authority. This word is not in use, except as applied to some Dacian prince: as, the despot of Servia.

DESPOTICAL. adj. [from despot.] Ab-

DESPOTICK. adj. Absolute in power; unlimited in authority; arbitrary; unac-countable.

God's universal law

Gave to the man despotic power
Over his female in due awe,
Nor from that right to part an hour,
Smile she or lower. Milton.

In all its directions of the inferior faculties, reason conveyed its suggestions with clearness,
and enjoined them with power: it had the passions in perfect subjection; though its command over them was but persuasive and political, yet it had the force of coercive and despotic laws. South.

We may see in a neighbouring government
the ill consequences of having a despotic prince;
for notwithstanding there is vast extent of lands, and many of them better than those of the Swiss and Grisons, the common people among the latter are in a much better situation. Addison.

Patriots were forced to give way to the madness of the people, who were now wholly bent upon single and despotic slavery. Swift.

DESPOTICALNESS. n. f. [from despoti-cal.] Absolute authority.

DESPOTISM. n. f. [despotisme, French;
from despot.] Absolute power.

purpose.

Birds are destinated to fly among the branches of trees and bushes. Roy.

DESTINATION. n. f. [from destinate.]
The purpose for which any thing is appointed; the ultimate design.

The passages through which spirits are conveyed to the members, being almost infinite, and each of them drawn through so many meanders, it is wonderful that they should perform their regular destinations without losing their way. Glanville.

There is a great variety of apprehensions and fancies of men, in the destination and application of things to several ends and uses. Hale.

TO DESTINE. v. a. [destino, Latin.]

1. To doom; to devote; to appoint unalterably to any state or condition.

Wherefore cease we then?

Say they who counsel war: we are decreed,
Reserv'd, and destin'd to eternal woe;
Whatever doing, what can we suffer more?
Milton.

All altars flame; before each altar lies,
Drench'd in his gore, the destin'd sacrifice.
Dryden.

2. To appoint to any use or purpose.

Too thin blood strays into the immediately subordinate vessels, which are destined to carry humours secreted from the blood. Arbuthnot.

3. To devote; to doom to punishment or misery: used absolutely.

May heav'n around this destin'd head
The choicest of its curses shed. Prior.

4. To fix unalterably.

The infernal judge's dreadful pow'r
From the dark urn shall throw thy destin'd hour.
Prior.

DESTINY. n. f. [destinée, French.]

1. The power that spins the life, and determines the fate, of living beings.

Thou art neither like thy sire or dam;

But, like a foul mis-shapen stigmata,
Mark'd by the destiny to be avoided. Shakspeare.

2. Fate; invincible necessity.

He said, dear daughter, rightly may I rue
The fall of famous children born of me;
But who can turn the stream of destiny,
Or break the chain of strong necessity,
Which fate is tied to Jove's eternal seat?
Fairy Queen.

How can hearts, not free, be tried whether they serve

Willing or no, who will shut what they must
By destiny, and can no other close? Milton.
Had thy great destiny but given thee skill
To know, as well as how, to act, let will.
De Witt.

Chance, or forceful destiny,
Which forms in causes first what shall be.
Dryden.

3. Doom; condition in future time.

At the pit of Aethion
Meet me i' th' morning: thither he Will come to know his destiny. Shakspeare.

DESTITUTE. adj. [destitutus, Latin.]

1. Forsaken; abandoned: with of.

To forsake the true God, of heaven, is to fall into all such evils upon the face of the earth, as men, either destitute of grace divine, may commit, or unprotected from above, may endure.
Hooker.

2. Abject; friendless.

He will regard the prayer of the destitute, and not despise their prayer. Psalms.

3. In want of.

Take the destin'd way
To find the regions destitute of any. Dryden.
Nothing can be a greater instance of the love that mankind has for liberty, than such a savage mountain covered with people, and the Campania of Rome, which lies in the same country, destitute of inhabitants. Addison.

DESTITUTION. n. f. [from destitute.]
Want; the state in which something is wanted: applied to persons.

That destitution in food and clothing is such an impediment, as, till it be removed, suffereth not the mind of man to admit any other care.

They which want furtherance unto knowledge, are not left in so great destitution, that justly any man should think the ordinary means of eternal life taken from them. Hooker.

The order of paying the debts of contract or restitution is set down by the civil laws of a kingdom: in destitution or want of such rules, we are to observe the necessity of the creditor,
the time of the delay, and the special obligations of friendship. Taylor.

TO DESTROY. v. a. [destruo, Lat. destruere, French.]

1. To overturn a city; to raze a building to ruin.

A people, great and many, and tall as the Anakims; but the Lord destroyed them before them, and they succeeded them, and dwelt in their stead. Deuteronomy.

'Tis safer to be that which we desire,
Than by destruction dwell in doubtful joy.

Shakspeare.

The wise Providence hath placed a certain antipathy between some animals and many insects, whereby they delight in their destruction, though they use them not as food; as the peacock destroys snakes and adders; the weasel, mice and rats; spiders, flies; and some sorts of flies destroy spiders. Hale.

4. To put an end to; to bring to nought.

Do we not see that slothful, intemperate, and incontinent persons despoil their bodies with diseases, their reputations with disgrace, and their faculties with want? Bentley.

There will be as many sovereigns as fathers: the mother too bath her title, which despoils the sovereignty of one supreme monarch. Locke.

DESTROYER. n. f. [from despoil.] The person that destroys or lays waste; a murderer.

It is said, that Assur both founded it and ruined it: it may be understood, that Assur the founder was the son of Shem, and Assur the destroyer was an Assyrian. Raleigh.

Triumph, to be styl'd great conquerors,
Patrons of mankind, gods, and sons of gods!
Destroyers tighter call'd, and slayers of men. Milton.

Yet, guiltless too, this bright destroyer lives;
At random wounds, nor knows the wound the gives. Pope.

DESTRUCTIBLE. adj. [from despoil, Lat.] Liable to destruction.

DESTRUCTIBILITY. n. f. [from despoil, Lat.] Liableness to destruction.

Both are defects equally destructive of true religion. Rogers.

3. With to.

In a firm building, even the cavities ought not to be filled with rubbish, which is of a perishable kind, destructive to the strength. Dryden.

Excess of cold, as well as heat, pains us; because it is equally destructive to that temper which is necessary to the preservation of life. Locke.

DESTRUCTIVELY. adv. [from despoil, Lat.] Ruinously; mischievously; with power to destroy.

What remains but on breathe out Moses's wish? O that men were not so destructively foolish! Decay of Piety.

DESTRUCTIVENESS. n. f. [from despoil, Lat.] The quality of destroying or ruining.

The vice of professors exceeds the depravity of the most hostile assaults, as intestine treachery is more ruinous than foreign violence. Decay of Piety.

DESTRUCTOR. n. f. [from despoil.]

Destroyer; consumer.

Helmont wittily calls the fire the destructor and the artificial death of things. Boyle.

DESUDATION. n. f. [from desudatio, Lat.]

A profuse and inordinate sweating, from what cause soever.

DESUETUDE. n. f. [from desuetudo, Lat.]

Cessation from being accustomed; discontinuance of practice or habit.

By the irruption of numerous armies of barbarous people, those countries were quickly fallen off, with barbarism and desuetude, from their former civility and knowledge. Hale.

We see in all things how desuetude does contract and narrow our faculties, so that we can apprehend only those things wherein we are conversant. Government of the Tongue.

DESULTORY. } adj. [from desultorius, Lat.]

DESULTORIOUS. } Roving from thing to thing; unfettled; immethodical; unconstant. Desultorius is not in use.

'Tis not for a desultory thought to atone for a lewd course of life; nor for any thing but the superinducing of a virtuous habit upon a vicious one, to qualify an effectual conversion. L'Estrange.

Let but the least trifle cross his way, and his desultories fancy presently takes the scent, leaves the unfinished and half-mangled notion, and skips away in pursuit of the new game. Norris.

Take my desultory thoughts in their native order, as they rise in my mind, without being reduced to rules, and marshalled according to art. Fulton on the Cliffs.

TO DESUME. v. a. [from desumo, Lat.] To take from any thing; to borrow.

This pebble doth suppose, as pre-existent to it, the more simple matter out of which it is desumed, the heat and influence of the sun, and the due preparation of the matter. Hale.

They have left us relations suitable to those of Ælian and Pliny, whence they desumed their narrations. Brown.

Laws, if convenient and useful, are never the worse though they be desumed and taken from the laws of other countries. Hale.

TO DETACH. v. a. [from detacher, Fr.]

full of raging agonies, and determinately bent that she would seek all loving means to win Zelmanc. Sidney.

In those errors they are so determinately settled, that they pay unto falsity the whole sum of whatsoever love is owing unto God's truth.

2. Certainly; unchangeably.

Think thus with yourselves, that you have not the making of things true or false; but that the truth and existence of things is already fixed and settled, and that the principles of religion are already either determinately true or false, before you think of them. Tillotson.

- DETERMINATION. n. f. [from determine.] 1. Absolute direction to a certain end.

When we voluntarily waste much of our lives, that remissness can by no means consist with a constant determination of will or desire to the greatest apparent good. Locke.

son for grammar, I do not see how it can be made a study, but as an introduction to rheto-rick. Locke.

Probability, in the nature of it, supposes that a thing may or may not be so, for any thing that yet appears, or is certainly determined, on the other side. South.

Milton's subject was still greater than Homer's or Virgil's: it does not determine the fate of single persons or nations, but of a whole species.

Destruction hangs on every word we speak,
On every thought, till the concluding stroke
Determines all, and closes our deluge. Addison.

3. To bound; to confine.

The knowledge of men hitherto hath been determined by the view or sight; so that whatsoever is invisible, either in respect of the fineness of the body itself, or the smallness of the parts, or of the subtilty of the motion, is little enquired. Havens.

The principium individuationis is existence itself, which determines a being of any sort to a particular time and place, incommunicable to two beings of the same kind. Locke.

No sooner have they climbed that hill, which thus determines their view at a distance, but a new prospect is opened. Atterbury.

4. To adjust; to limit; to define.

He that has settled in his mind determin'd ideas, with names affixed to them, will be able to discern their differences one from another, which is really distinguishing. Locke.

5. To influence the choice.

You have the captives
Who were the opposites of this day's strife;
We do require them of you, so to use them
As we shall find their merits and our safety
May equally determine. Shakespeare.

A man may suspend the act of his choice from being determined for or against the thing proposed, till he has examined it. Locke.

As soon as the studious man's hunger and thirst makes him uneasy, he, whose will was never determined to any pursuit of good cheer, is,
by the uneasiness of hunger and thirst, presently determined to eating and drinking. Locke.

6. To resolve.

Jonathan knew that it was determined of his father to slay David. 1 Samuel.

7. To decide.

I do not ask whether bodies do exist, that the motion of one cannot be without the motion of another: to determine thus either way, is to beg the question for or against a vacuum. Locke.

8. To put an end to; to destroy.

Now where is he, that will not stay so long Till sickness hath determin'd me? Shakespeare.

We frequently see simple ulcers afflicted with sharp humours, which corrode them, and render them painful torrid ulcers, if not timely relieved by detersives and lements. Hoffman.

To DETEST. v. a. [detestor, Latin.]

To hate; to abhor; to abominate.

Nigh thereto the ever-damned beast,
Durst not approach; for he was deadly made,
And all that life preserved did detest. F. Queen.
Glory grows guilty of detested crimes,
When for fame's sake, for praise, an outward part,

We bend to that the working of the heart. Shaks.
I've liv'd in such dishonour, that the gods
Detest my benefice. Shakespeare.

There is that naturally in the heart of man which abhors sin as sin, and consequently would make him detest it both in himself and others too. South.

Who dares think one thing, and another tell,
My heart detests him as the gates of hell. Pope.

DETESTABLE. adj. [from detest.] Hateful; abhorred; abominable; odious.

Beguil'd, divorc'd, wrong'd, spighted, slain!
Most detestable death. Shakespeare.

He detested him to consider that both armies consisted of christians, to whom nothing is more detestable than effusion of human blood. Hayward.

DETESTABLY. adv. [from detestable.]

Hatefully; abominably; odiously.
It stands here stigmatized by the apostle as a temper of mind rendering men so detestably bad, that the great enemy of mankind neither can nor desires to make them worse. South.

DETESTATION. n. f. [from detest.]

1. Hatred; abhorrence; abomination.

Then only did misfortune make her see what she had done, especially finding in us rather detestation than pity. Sidney.

2. It is sometimes used with for; but of seems more proper.

DETRACTER. n. f. [from detract.] One that takes away another's reputation; one that impairs the honour of another injuriously.

I am right glad to be thus satisfied, in that I yet was never able till now to choke the mouth of such detractors with the certain knowledge of their slanderous untruths. Spenser on Ireland.

Whether we are so entirely sure of their loyalty upon the present foot of government, as you may imagine, their detractors make a question. Swift.

Away the fair detractors went,
And gave by turns their censures vent. Swift.

DETRACTIO. n. f. [detractio, Latin; detractio, French.]

Detraction, in the native importance of the word, signifies the withdrawing or taking off from a thing; and, as it is applied to the reputation, it denotes the impairing or lessening a man in point of fame, rendering him less valued and esteemed by others, which is the final aim of detraction. Ayliffe.

I put myself to thy direction, and Unspoke mine own detraction; here abjure
The taunts and blames I laid upon myself,
For strangers to my nature. Shakespeare.

Fame, that her high birth to raise,
Seem'd evil to lavish and profuse,
We may justly now accuse
Of detraction from her praise. Milton.

If detraction could invite us, discretion surely would contain us from any derogatory intention. Brown.

To put a stop to the insults and detractions of vain men, I resolv'd to enter into the examination. Woodward.

To consider an author as the subject of obloquy and detraction, we may observe with what pleasure a work is received by the invidious part of mankind, in which a writer falls short of himself. Addison.

DETRACTORY. adj. [from detract.] Defamatory by denial of desert; derogatory. Sometimes with to, properly from.

This is not only derogatory unto the wisdom of God, who hath propos'd the world unto our knowledge, and thereby the notion of himself; but also detractory unto the intellect and sense of man, expressly disposed for that inquiry. Brown.

In mentioning the joys of heaven, I use the expressions I find lets detractory from a theme above our praises. Boyle.

Descends, thither with heart, and voice, and eyes

Directed in devotion, to adore
And worship God supreme, who made him chief
Of all his works. Milton.

From the full choir when loud devotion rises,
And swell the pomp of dreadful sacrifice;
Amid that scene, if some relenting eye
Glance on the stone where our cold reliques lie,
Devotion's self shall steal a thought from heav'n,
One human tear shall drop, and be forgiv'n. Pope.

Devotion may be considered either as an exercise of publick or private prayers at set times and occasions, or as a temper of the mind, a state and disposition of the heart, which is rightly affected with such capacities. Law.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

DEW. n. f. [beap, Saxon; daaw, Dutch.]

The moisture upon the ground.

Fogs which we frequently observe after sun-setting, even in our hottest months, are nothing but a vapour consisting of water; which vapour was sent up in greater quantity all the foregoing day, than now in the evening: but the sun then being above the horizon, taking it at the surface of the earth, and rapidly mounting it up into the atmosphere, it was not discernible: the sun being now gone off, the vapour stagnates at and near the earth, and saturates the air till it is so thick as to be easily visible therein: and when at length the heat there is somewhat farther spent, which is usually about the middle of the night, it falls down again in a dew, alighting upon herbs and other vegetables, which it cherishes, cools, and refreshes.
Woodward.

Never yet one hour in bed
Did I enjoy the golden dew of sleep,
But with his tim'rous dreams was still awak'd.
Shakespeare.

That churchman bears a bounteous mind, indeed;
A hand as fruitful as the land that feeds us;
His dew falls ev'ry where.

Shakespeare.

That churchman bears a bounteous mind, indeed;
A hand as fruitful as the land that feeds us;
His dew falls ev'ry where.
Shakespeare.

She looks as clear
As morning roses newly wash'd with dew.
Shakespeare.

That churchman bears a bounteous mind, indeed;
A hand as fruitful as the land that feeds us;
His dew falls ev'ry where.
Shakespeare.

She looks as clear
As morning roses newly wash'd with dew.
Shakespeare.

That churchman bears a bounteous mind, indeed;
A hand as fruitful as the land that feeds us;
His dew falls ev'ry where.
Shakespeare.

She looks as clear
As morning roses newly wash'd with dew.
Shakespeare.

Dew and rain are but the returns of moist vapours condensed.
Bacon.

Now sliding streams the thirsty plants renew,
And feed their fibres with reviving dew.
Pope.

TO DEW. v. a. [from the noun.]

To wet as with dew; to moisten; to bedew.

A trickling stream of balm most sovereign,
And dainty dew, which on the ground still fell,
And overflow'd all the fertile plain,
As it had dew'd been with timely rain.
Fairy Q.

With him pour we in our country's purge
Each drop of us.
—Or so much as it needs
To dew the sovereign flower, and drown the weeds.
Shakespeare.

Give me thy hand,
That I may dew it with my mournful tears.
Shakespeare.

He ceas'd; discerning Adam with such joy
Surcharg'd, as had, like grief, been dew'd in tears,
Without the vent of words which these he breath'd.
Milton.

Palemon above the rest appears
In sable garments, dew'd with gulshing tears.
Dryden.

In Gallick blood again
He dew his reeking sword, and throws the ground
With headless ranks.
Philips.

DEWBERRY. n. f. [from dew and berry.]

Dewberries, as they stand here among the more delicate fruits, must be understood to mean raspberries, which are also of the bramble kind.
Hannay.

Feed him with apricocks and dewberries,
With purple grapes, green figs, and mulberries.
Shakespeare.

DEWBESPENT. part. [dew and bespent.]

Sprinkled with dew.

This evening late, by them the chewing flocks
Had ta'en their supper on the savoury herb
Of knot-grass dewbespent, and were in fold,
I sat me down to watch upon a bank
With ivy canopied, and interwove
With flaunting honey-suckle.
Milton.

DEW-BURNING. adj. [from dew and burning.]

The meaning of this compound is doubtful. Perhaps it alludes to the sparkling of dew.

He now, to prove his late renewed might,
High brandishing his bright dew-burning blade,
Upon his crested scalp so sore did smite,
That to the skull a yawning wound it made.
Fairy Queen.

DEWDROP. n. f. [dew and drop.]

A drop of dew which sparkles at sunrise.

I must go seek some dewdrops here,
And hang a pearl in every cowslip's ear.
Shakf.

Innumerable as the stars of night,
Or stars of morning, dewdrops, which the sun
Imparts on ev'ry leaf, and ev'ry flower.
Milton.

Red, sweet as dewdrops on the flow'ry lawn,
When the sky opens, and the morning dawns!
Tieck.

DEWLAP. n. f. [from lapping or licking the dew.]

1. The flesh that hangs down from the throat of oxen.

Large routes of fat about his shoulders slung,
And from his neck the double dewlap hung.
Addison.

2. It is used in Shakespeare for a lip flaccid with age, in contempt.

And sometimes lurk I in a gossip's bowl,
In very likeness of a roasted crab;
And when she drinks against her lips I bob,
And on the wither'd dewlap pour the ale.
Shakespeare.

DEWLAPT. adj. [from dewlap.]

Enriched with dewlaps.

Who would believe that there were mountaineers Devolapt like bulls, whose throats had hanging at 'em

Wallets of flesh? Shakspeare.

The dewlap bull now chafes along the plain,
While burning love ferments in every vein. Gay.

DE'W-WORM. n. f. [from dew and worm.] A worm found in dew.

For the trout, the dew worm, which some call the lob worm, and the branding, are the chief. Watson.

DE'WY. adj. [from dew.]

1. Resembling dew; partaking of dew.

From the earth a dewy mist
Went up, and water'd all the ground, and each Plant of the field. Milton.

Where two adverse winds,
Sublim'd from dewy vapours in mid sky,
Engage with hurrid shock, the ruffled brise Rears stormy. Philips.

2. Moist with dew; roscid.

The joyous day 'gan early to appear,
And fair Aurora from her dewy bed
Of aged Tithone 'gan herself to rear,
With rosy cheeks, for shame as blushing red
Spenser.

The lee with honied thigh,
That at her flow'ry work doth sing,
And the waters murmuring,
With such comfort as they keep,
Entice the dewy feather'd sleep.
His dewy locks distill'd
Milton.

Beficles the 'accour which cold Ancien yields,
The rocks of Hemicus and dewy fields. Dryden.

My mother's blood
Runs on the dexter cheek, and this sinister Bounds in my fire's. Shakspeare.

DEXTERITY. n. f. [dexteritas, Lat.]

1. Readiness of limbs; activity; readiness to attain skill; skill; expertness.

2. Readiness of contrivance; quickness of expedient; skill of management.

His wisdom, by often evading from peril, was turned rather into a dexterity to deliver himself from dangers when they pressed him, than into a providence to prevent and remove them afar off. Bacon.

They attempted to be knaves, but wanted art and dexterity. South.

The same Protestants may, by their dexterity, make themselves the national religion, and dispose the church-revenues among their pastors. Swift.

DEXTEROUS. adj. [dexter, Latin.]

1. Expert at any manual employment; active; ready; as, a dexterous workman.

For both their dext'rous hands the lances could wield. Pope.

2. Expert in management; subtle; full of expedients.

They confine themselves, and are dexterous managers enough of the wares and products of that corner with which they content themselves. Locke.

DEXTEROUSLY. adv. [from dexterous.]

Expertly; skillfully; artfully.

The magistrate sometimes cannot do his own office dexterously, but by acting the minister. South.

But then my study was to cog the dice,
And dext'rously to throw the lucky dice. Dryden.

As for any tunicles or skins, which should binder the liver from enabling the dextral parts, we must not conceive it disuseful its virtue by mere irradiation, but by its veins and proper vei-cils. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

If there were a determinate prepotency in the right, and such as ariseth from a constant root in nature, we might expect the same in other animals, whose parts are also differenced by dextrality. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

DIABETES. n. f. [diabētes.] A morbid copiousness of urine; a fatal colliquation by the urinary passages.

An increase of that secretion may accompany the general colliquations: as in fluxes, hectic sweats and coughs, diabetes, and other consumptions. Derham's Physico-Theology.

DIABOLICAL. } adj. [from diabolus, DIABOLICK. } Latin.] Devilish; partaking of the qualities of the devil; impious; atrocious; nefarious; pertaining to the devil.

This, in other least observ'd,
Doubt might beget of diabolick pow'r,
Active within, beyond the sense of brute. Mil.

Does not the ambitious, the envious, and the revengeful man know very well, that the thirst of blood, and affectation of dominion by violence and oppression, is a most diabolical outrage upon the laws of God and Nature. L'Estrange.

The practice of lying is a diabolical exercise, and they that use it are the devil's children. Ray.

Damned spirits must needs be all envy, despair, and rage: and have so much of a diabolical nature in them, as to wish all men to share their misery. Atterbury.

DIACODIUM. n. f. [diacodium.] The syrup of poppies.

DIACOSTICS. n. f. [diacostica.] The doctrine of sounds.

DI'ADEM. n. f. [diadema, Latin.]

1. A tiara; an ensign of royalty bound about the head of eastern monarchs.

The fact'd diadem in pieces rent,
And purple robe gored with many a wound.
Spenser.

A list the coblers' temples ties,
To keep the hair out of their eyes;
From whence 'tis plain the diadem,
That princes wear, derives from them. Swift.

2. The mark of royalty worn on the head; the crown.

A crown,
Golden in shew, is but a wreath of thorns;
Brings dangers, troubles, cares, and sleepless nights.

To him who wears the regal diadem. Milton.

Why should he ravish then that diadem
From your grey temples, which the hand of time Must shortly plant on his? Denham.

Faction, that once made diadems her prey,
And stoop our prince in his triumphant way,
Fled like a mist before this radiant day. Rowson.

DI'ADENED. adj. [from diadem.] Adorned with a diadem; crowned.

Not so, when diadem'd with rays divine, Touch'd with the flame that breaks from virtue's throne,
Her priestless muse forbids the good to die,
And opens the temple of eternity. Pope.

DI'ADROM. n. f. [diadromos.] The time in which any motion is performed; the time in which a pendulum performs its vibration.

A gry is one tenth of a line, a line one tenth of an inch, an inch one tenth of a philosophical foot, a philosophical foot one third of a pendulum; whose diadromi, in the latitude of forty-five degrees, are each equal to one second of time, or a fortieth of a minute. Locke.

DIE'RESIS. n. f. [dièresis.] The separation or disjunction of syllables; as aër.

DIAGNO'STICK. n. f. [diagnōstikon.] A symptom by which a disease is distinguished from others.

I shall lay down some indisputable marks of this vice, that whenever we see the tokens, we may conclude the plague is in the house:—let us hear your diagnōsticks. Cather on Pride.

One of our physicians proved disappointed of his prognosticks, or rather diagnōsticks. Harvey.

DIA'GONAL. adj. [diagonos.] Reaching from one angle to another, so as to divide a parallelogram into equal parts.

The monotrocity of the badger is dis-contrived, and with some disadvantage; the shortness being fixed unto the legs of one side, that might have been more properly placed upon the diagonal mover. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

All sorts of Stone composed of granules, will cut and rise in any direction, as well in a perpendicular, or in a diagonally, as horizontally and parallel to the side of the strata. Woodward.

DIA'GONAL. n. f. [from the adjective.]

A line drawn from angle to angle, and dividing a square into equal parts.

When a man has in his mind the idea of two lines, viz. the side and diagonal of a square, whereof the diagonal is an inch long, he may have the idea also of the division of that line into a certain number of equal parts. Locke.

DIA'GONALLY. adv. [from diagonal.] In a diagonal direction.

The right and left are not defined by philosophers according to common acceptation, that is, respectively from one man unto another, or any constant site in each, as though that should be the right in one, which, upon confront or facing, stands athwart or diagonally unto the other; but were distinguished according unto their activity, and predominant locomotion, on the either side. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

DI'AGRAM. n. f. [diagramma.] A delimation of geometrical figures; a mathematical scheme.

Many a fair precept in poetry is like a seeming demonstration in the mathematicks; very specious in the diagram, but failing in the mechanick operation. Dryden.

Why do not these persons make a diagram of these cogitative lines and angles, and demonstrate their properties of perception and appetite, as plainly as we know the other properties of triangles and circles? Beaulty.

DIAGRY'DIATES. n. f. [from diagrydium, Lat.] Strong purgatives made with diagrydium.

All cholerick humours ought to be evacuated by diagrydiates, mixed with tartar, or some acid, or ribubar powder. Floyer.

DIAL. n. f. [diale, Skinner.] A plate marked with lines, where a hand or shadow shows the hour.

O, gentlemen, the time of life is short:
To spend that shortness basely were too long,
Though life did ride upon a dial's point,
Still ending at th' arrival of an hour. Shakspeare.

If the motion be very slow, we perceive it not:
we have no sense of the accretive motion of plants or animals; and the fly shadow steals away upon the dial, and the quickest eye can discover no more than that it is gone. Glanville.

DIAL-PLATE. n. f. [dial and plate.] That on which hours or lines are marked.

Strada tells us that the two friends, being each of them possessed of a magnetical needle, made a kind of dial-plate, inscribing it with the four and twenty letters, in the same manner as the hours of the day are marked upon the ordinary dial-plate. Addison's Spectator.

DIALECT. n. f. [diálekto.]

1. The subdivision of a language; as the Attic, Doric, Ionic, Æolic dialects.

2. Style; manner of expression.

When themselves do praise that whereof they write, they change then dialec; and those words they shun, as if there were in them some secret sting. Hooker.

3. Language; speech.

In her youth

There is a prone and speechless dialec,
Such as moves men. Shakspeare.

If the conferring of a kindness did not bind the person upon whom it was conferred to the returns of gratitude, why, in the universal dialec of the world, are kindnesses still called obligations? South.

DIALECTICAL. adj. [from dialektik.] Logical; argumental.

Those dialectical subtleties, that the schoolmen employ about physiological mysteries, more declare the wit of him that uses them, than increase the knowledge of sober lovers of truth. Boyle.

DIALECTICK. n. f. [δialektikē.] Logic; the art of reasoning.DIALLING. n. f. [from dial.] The scia-terick science; the knowledge of shadow; the art of constructing dials on which the shadow may show the hour.DIALIST. n. f. [from dial.] A constructor of dials.

Scientifick dialists, by the geometrick considerations of lines, have found out rules to mark out the irregular motion of the shadow in all latitudes, and on all planes. Mason.

DIALOGIST. n. f. [from dialogue.] A speaker in a dialogue or conference; a writer of dialogues.DIALOGUE. n. f. [δIALOGOS.] A conference; a conversation between two or more, either real or feigned.

Will you hear the dialogue that the two learned men have compiled in praise of the owl and cuckoo? Shakspeare.

Oh, the impudence of this wicked sex! Lascivious dialogues are innocent with you. Dryden.

In easy dialogues is Fletcher's praise:
He mov'd the mind, but had not pow'r to raise. Dryden.

TO DIALOGUE. v. n. [from the noun.]

To discourse with another; to confer.

Doit dialogue with thy shadow? Shakspeare.

DIALYSIS. n. f. [δIALYSIS.] The figure in rhetoric by which syllables or words are divided.DIAMETER. n. f. [δια and μετρον.] The line which, passing through the centre of a circle, or other curvilinear figure, divides it into equal parts.

The space between the earth and the moon, according to Ptolemy, is seventeen times the diameter of the earth, which makes, in a gross account, about one hundred and twenty thousand miles. Raleigh.

The bay of Naples is the most delightful one that I ever saw: it lies in almost a round figure of about thirty miles in the diameter. Addison.

DIAMETRAL. adj. [from diameter.] Describing the diameter; relating to the diameter.DIAMETRAU. adv. [from diametral.] According to the direction of a diameter; in direct opposition.

Christian piety is, beyond all other things, diametrally opposed to prophaneness and impiety of actions. Hammond.

DIAMETRICAL. adj. [from diameter.]

1. Describing a diameter.

VOL. I.

2. Observing the direction of a diameter.

The fin of columny is set in a most diametrical opposition to the evangelical precept of loving our neighbours as ourselves. Gov. of the Tongue.

DIAMETRICALLY. adv. [from diametrical.] In a diametrical direction.

He persuaded the king to consent to what was diametrically against his conscience and his honour, and, in truth, his security. Clarendon.

Thus intercepted in its passage, the vapour, which cannot penetrate the stratum diametrically, glides along the lower surface of it, permeating the horizontal interval, which is betwixt the said dense stratum and that which lies underneath it. Woodward.

D'AMOND. n. f. [diamant, Fr. adamas, Latin.]

The diamond, the most valuable and hardest of all the gems, is, when pure, perfectly clear and pellucid as the purest water; and is eminently distinguished from all other substances by its vivid splendour, and the brightness of its reflexions. It is extremely various in shape and size, being found in the greatest quantity very small, and the larger ones extremely seldom met with. The largest ever known is that in the possession of the Great Mogul, which weighs two hundred and seventy-nine carats, and is computed to be worth seven hundred and seventy-nine thousand two hundred and forty four pounds. The diamond bears the force of the strongest fires, except the concentrated solar rays, without hurt; and even that infinitely fiercest of all fires does it no injury, unless directed to its weaker parts. It bears a glass house fire for many days, and if taken carefully out, and suffered to cool by degrees, is found as bright and beautiful as before; but if taken hastily out, it will sometimes crack, and even split into two or three pieces. The places where we have diamonds are the East Indies and the Brasils; and though they are usually found clear and colourless, yet they are sometimes slightly tinged with the colours of the other gems, by the mixture of some metalline particles. Hill on Fossils.

Give me the ring of mine you had at dinner;
Or, for the diamond, the chain you promis'd. Shakspeare.

I see how thine eye would emulate the diamond:
thou hast the right arched bent of the brow. Shakspeare.

The diamond is preferable and vastly superior to all others in lustre and beauty: as also in hardness, which renders it more durable and lasting, and therefore much more valuable, than any other stone. Woodward.

The diamond is by mighty monarchs worn,
Fair as the star that ushers in the morn. Blackmore.
The lively diamond drinks thy purest rays,
Collected light, compact. Thomson.

DIAPASE. n. f. [δια παση.] A chord including all tones. The old word for diapason. See DIAPASON.

And 'twixt them both a quadrant was the base,
Proportion'd equally by seven and nine;
Nine was the circle set in heaven's place,
All which compacted made a good diapase. Spenser.

The sweet numbers and melodious measures,
With which I wove the winged words to tie,
And make a tuneful diapase of pleasures,
Now being let to run at liberty. Spenser.

DIAPASON. n. f. [δια παση.]

Diapason denotes a chord which includes all tones: it is the same with that we call an eighth, as an octave; because there are but seven tones or notes, and then the eighth is the same again with the first. Harris.

It discovereth the true coincidence of sounds into diapason, which is the return of the same sound. Bacon.

Harsh din

Broke the fair musick that all creatures made
To their great Lord, whose love their motion (way'd

In perfect diapason, whilst they stood
In full obedience, and their state of good. Milton.

Many a sweet rise, many as sweet a fall,
A full-mouth diapason swallows all. Urethow.

From harmony, from heavenly harmony,
This universal frame began;

From harmony to harmony
Through all the compass of the notes it ran,
The diapason closing full in man. Dryden.

DIAPER. n. f. [diapre, Fr. of uncertain etymology.]

1. Linen cloth woven in flowers, and other figures; the finest species of figured linen after damask.

Not any damask, which her vaunteth most
In skilful knitting of soft silken twine;
Nor any weaver, which his work doth boast
In diaper, in damask, or in lyne,
Might in their diverse cunning ever dare
With this so curious net-work to compare. Spenser.

2. A napkin; a towel.

Let one attend him with a silver basin
Full of rose-water, and bestrew'd with flowers;
Another bear the ewer, a third a diaper. Shak.

TO DIAPER. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To variegate; to diversify; to flower.

For fear the stones her tender foot should wrong,
The ground he strew'd with flowers all along,
And diaper'd like the discolour'd mead. Spenser.
Flora used to cloath our grand-dame Earth with a new livery, diaper'd with various flowers, and chequered with delightful objects. Hewel.

2. To draw flowers upon clothes.

If you diaper upon folds, let your work be broken, and taken, as it were, by the half; for reason tells you, that your fold must cover somewhat unseen. Peasam on Drawing.

DIAPHANEITY. n. f. [from diaphania.] Transparency; pellucidity; power of transmitting light.

Because the outward coat of the eye ought to be pellucid, to transmit the light, which, if the eyes should always stand open, would be apt to grow dry and shrink, and lose their diaphaneity; therefore are the eye-lids so contrived as often to wink, that so they may, as it were, glaze and varnish them over with the moisture they contain. Ray.

DIAPHANICK. adj. [δια and φανος.] Transparent; pellucid; having the power to transmit light.

Air is an element superior, and lighter than water, through whose vast, open, subtle, diaphanick, or transparent body, the light, afterwards created, easily transpired. Raleigh.

DIAPHANOUS. adj. [δια and φανος.] Transparent; clear; translucent; pellucid; capable to transmit light.

Aristotle calleth light a quality inherent or cleaving to a diaphanous body. Raleigh.

When he had taken off the insect, he found in the leaf very little and diaphanous eggs, exactly like to those which yet remained in the tubes of the fly's womb. Ray.

DIAPHORETICK. adj. [διαφωρητικος.] Sudorific; promoting a diaphoretic or perspiration; causing sweat.

A diaphoretick medicine, or a sudorific, is something that will provoke sweating. Hall.

Diaphoreticks, or promoters of perspiration, help the organs of digestion, because the attenuation of the aliment makes it perspirable. Stebuth.

DIAPHRAGM. n. f. [διαφραγμα.]

1. The midriff which divides the upper cavity of the body from the lower.

2. Any division or partition which divides a hollow body.

It consists of a fasciculus of bodies, round, about one sixth of an inch in diameter, hollow, and parted into numerous cells by means of diaphragms thick set throughout the whole length of the body. Woodward.

DIARRHOEA. n. f. [διαρροια.] A flux of the belly, whereby a person frequently goes to stool, and is cured either by purging off the cause, or restraining the bowels. Quincy.

During his diarrhoea I healed up the fontanelles. Wismar.

DIARRHOETICK. adj. [from diarrhoea.] Promoting the flux of the belly; solutive; purgative.

Millet is diarrhetic, cleansing, and useful in diseases of the kidneys. Arbutnot.

DIARY. n. f. [diarium, Lat.] An account of the transactions, accidents, and observations of every day; a journal.

In sea voyages, where there is nothing to be seen but sky and sea, men make diaries; but, in land-travel, wherein so much is to be observed, they omit it. Bacon.

I go on in my intended diary. Tatler.

DIASTOLE. n. f. [διαστολη.]

1. A figure in rhetoric, by which a short syllable is made long.

2. The dilatation of the heart.

The systole seems to resemble the forcible bending of a spring, and the diastole its flying out again to its natural state. Ray.

DIASTYLE. [δια, and στυλος, a pillar.] A sort of edifice, where the pillars stand at such a distance from one another, that three diameters of their thickness are allowed for intercolumniation. Harris.

DIATHESSERON. n. f. [of δια, and τессαρες, four.] An interval in musick, composed of one greater tone, one lesser, and one greater semitone: its proportion being as four to three. It is called, in musical composition, a perfect fourth. Harris.

DIATONICK. [of διατονος.] The ordinary sort of musick which proceeds by different tones, either in ascending or descending. It contains only the two greater and lesser tones, and the greater semitone. Harris.

DIATHEUTICK Tone. [of δια and θευτικος.] In the ancient Greek musick, disjoined two-fourths, one on each side of it; and which, being joined to either, made a fifth. This is, in our musick, from A to B.

They allowed to this diatheutick tone, which is our La, Mi, the proportion of nine to eight, as being the unalterable difference of the fifth and fourth. Harris.

DIBBLE. n. f. [from dipfel, Dutch, a sharp point, Skinner; from dabble, Junius.] A small spade; a pointed instrument with which the gardeners make holes for planting.

Through cunning, with dibble, rake, mattock, and spade,

By line and by level trim garden is made. Tupper's Husbandry.

DIBSTONE. n. f. A little stone which children throw at another stone.

I have seen little girls exercise whole hours together, and take abundance of pains, to be expert at dibstones. Locke.

DICA'CITY. n. f. [dicacitas, Lat.] Pertinels; faucinals. Diä.

DICE. n. f. The plural of die. See DIE.

It is above a hundred to one against any particular throw, that you do not cast any given set of faces with four cubical dice; because there are so many several combinations of the six faces of four dice; now, after you have cast all the trials but one, it is still as much odds at the last remaining time, as it was at the first. Bentley.

TO DICE. v. n. [from the noun.] To game with dice.

I was as virtuously given as a gentleman need to be; virtuous enough; swore little; diced not above seven times a week. Shakespeare.

DICE-BOX. n. f. [dice and box.] The box from which the dice are thrown.

What would you say, should you see the sparkler shaking her elbow for a whole night together, and thumping the table with a dice-box? Adelphi.

DICER. n. f. [from dice.] A player at dice; a gamester.

They make marriage vows As false as dicers' oaths. Shakespeare.

DICH. This word seems corrupted from dit for do it.

Rich men sin, and I eat root: Much good dich thy good heart, Apemantus. Shakespeare's Timon.

DICHOTOMY. n. f. [διχοτομία.] Distribution of ideas by pairs.

Some persons have disturbed the order of nature, and abused their readers by an affectation of dichotomies, trichotomies, sevens, twelves, &c. Let the nature of the subject, considered together with the design which you have in view, always determine the number of parts into which you divide it. Watts.

DICKENS. A kind of adverbial exclamation, importing, as it seems, much the same with the devil; but I know not whence derived.

Where had you this pretty weathercock?—

—I cannot tell what the dickens his name is my husband had him of. Shakespeare.

What a dickens does he mean by a trivial sum?

—But ha'n't you found it, sir? Congreve.

DICKER of Leather. n. f. [diera, low Lat.] Ten hides. Diä.

TO DICTATE. v. a. [dicto, Lat.] To deliver to another with authority; to declare with confidence.

The spoils of elephants the roofs inlay, And studded amber darts a golden ray; Such, and not nobler, in the realms above, My wonder dictates the dome of Jove. Pope. Whatsoever is dictated to us by God himself, or by men who are divinely inspired, must be believed with full assurance. Watts.

DICTATE. n. f. [dictatum, Lat.] Rule or maxim delivered with authority; prescription; prescript.

Those right helps of art, which will scarce be found by those who servilely confine themselves to the dictates of others. Locke.

I credit what the Grecian dictates say, And Samian sounds o'er Scota's hills convey. Prior.

Then let this dictate of my love prevail. Pope.

DICTATION. n. f. [from dictate.] The act or practice of dictating or prescribing. Diä.

DICTATOR. n. f. [Latin.]

1. A magistrate of Rome, made in times of exigence and distress, and invested with absolute authority.

Kind dictators made, when they came home, Their vanquish'd foes free citizens of Rome. Waller.

Julius with honour tam'd Rome's foreign foes; But patriots fell, ere the dictator rose. Prior.

2. One invested with absolute authority.

Unanimous they all commit the care And management of this main enterprise To him, their great dictator. Milnes.

3. One whose credit or authority enables him to direct the conduct or opinion of others.

Nor is it a small power it gives one man over another, to have the authority to be the dictator of principles, and teacher of unquestionable truths. Locke.

That riches, honours, and outward splendour, should set up persons for dictators to all the rest of mankind, is a most shameful invasion of the right of our understanding. Watts.

DICTATORIAL. adj. [from dictator.] Authoritative; confident; dogmatical; overbearing.

A young academick often dwells upon a journal, or an observator that treats of trade and politics in a dictatorial stile, and is lavish in the praise of the author. Watts.

DICTATORSHIP. n. f. [from dictator.]

1. The office of dictator.

This is the solemnest title they can confer under the principedom, being indeed a kind of dictatorship. Wotton.

Shew a while like fearful war, To dier rank minds sick of happiness, And purge th' obstructions which begin to stop Out very veins of life. Shakspere's Henry iv.
He was not taken well; he had not din'd: The veins unfill'd, our blood is cold; and then We pow'r upon the morning, are unapt To give or to forgive; but when we've stuff'd These pipes, and these conveyances of blood, With wine and feeding, we have suppler souls Than in our priestlike tasks; therefore I'll watch him Till he be dier'd to my request. Shakspere.

D I F

I will attend my husband, be his nurse,
Diet his sickness; for it is my office. Shaksp.
Henceforth my early care
Shall tend thee, and the fertile burden ease;
Till, dieted by thee, I grow mature
In knowledge as the gods, who all things know. Milton.

We have lived upon expedients, of which no country had less occasion: we have dieted a health-thy body into a consumption, by plying it with physick instead of food. Swift.

2. To give food to.
I'm partly led to diet my revenge,
For that I do suspect the lusty Moor
Hath kept into my seat. Shakspere's Othello.

3. To board; to supply with diet.

TO DIET. v. n.

1. To eat by rules of physick.

2. To eat; to feed.

I join with thee calm peace and quiet;
Spare fall, that oft with gods doth diet. Milton.

DIET-DRINK. n. f. [diet and drink.]
Medicated liquors; drink brewed with medicinal ingredients.

The observation will do that better than the lady's diet-drinks, or apothecary's medicines. Locke.

DIET. n. f. [from dies, an appointed day, Skinner; from diet, an old German word signifying a multitude, Junius.] An assembly of princes or estates.

An emperor in title without territory, who can ordain nothing of importance but by a diet, or assembly of the estates of many free princes, ecclesiastical and temporal. Raleigh.

DIETARY. adj. [from diet.] Pertaining to the rules of diet. DiD.

DIETER. n. f. [from diet.] One who prescribes rules for eating; one who prepares food by medicinal rules.

He saved our broth as Juno had been sick,
And he her dieter. Shakspere's Cymbeline.

DIETETICAL. } adj. [diet and drink.] Re-DIETETICK. } lating to diet; belonging to the medicinal cautions about the use of food.

He received no other counsel than to refrain from cold drink, which was but a dietetical caution, and such as culinary prescription might have afforded. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

This book of Cheyne's became the subject of conversation, and produced even sects in the dietetick philosophy. Arbutnot on Alim.

TO DIFFER. v. n. [differe, Latin.]

1. To be distinguished from; to have properties and qualities not the same with those of another person or thing.

If the pipe be a little wet on the inside, it will make a differing sound from the same pipe dry. Bacon.

Thy prejudices, Syphax, won't discern
What virtues grow from ignorance and choice,
Nor how the hero differs from the brute. Addison's Cato.

The several parts of the same animal differ in their qualities. Arbutnot.

2. To contend; to be at variance.

A man of judgment shall sometimes hear ignorant men differ, and know well within himself that those who so differ mean one thing, and yet they themselves never agree. Bacon.

Hence uncontrou'd you may in judgment sit;
We'll never differ with a crowded pit. Rowe.

3. To be of a contrary opinion.

In things purely speculative, as these are, and no ingredients of our faith, it is free to differ from one another in our opinions and sentiments.
Burnet's Theory.

D I F

There are certain measures to be kept, which may leave a tendency rather to gain than to irritate those who differ with you in their sentiments. Addison's Freeholder.

Others differ with me about the truth and reality of these speculations. Cheyne.

DIFFERENCE. n. f. [differentia, Latin.]

1. State of being distinct from something;
contrariety to identity.

Where the faith of the holy church is one, a difference between customs of the church doth no harm. Hooker.

2. The quality by which one differs from another.

This nobility, or difference from the vulgar, was not in the beginning given to the succession of blood, but to the succession of virtue. Raleigh.

Thus, born alike, from virtue first began
The difference that distinguish'd man from man:
He claim'd no title from descent of blood;
But that, which made him noble, made him good. Dryden.

Though it be useful to discern every variety that is to be found in nature, yet it is not convenient to consider every difference that is in things, and divide them into distinct classes under every such difference. Locke.

3. The disproportion between one thing and another, caused by the qualities of each.

You shall see great difference betwixt our Bohemia and your Sicilia. Shakspere's Winter's Tale.

On the strange difference of man and man!
To thee a woman's services are due;
My fool usurps my body. Shaksp. King Lear.

Here might be seen a great difference between men practised to fight, and men accustomed only to spoil. Hayward.

4. Dispute; debate; quarrel; controversy.

What was the difference?—It was a contention in publick. Shakspere's Cymbeline.

He is weary of his life, that hath a difference with any of them, and will walk abroad after daylight. Sandys.

Nothing could have fallen out more unluckily than that there should be such differences among them about that which they pretend to be the only means of ending differences. Tillotson.

5. Distinction.

Our constitution does not only make a difference between the guilty and the innocent; but, even among the guilty, between such as are more or less criminal. Addison's Freeholder.

6. Point in question; ground of controversy.

Are you acquainted with the difference
That holds this present question in the court? Shakspere.

7. A logical distinction.

Some are never without a difference; and commonly, by amusing men with a subtilty, blanch
the matter. Bacon.

8. Evidences of distinction; differential marks.

Henry had the title of sovereign, yet did not put those things in execution which are the true marks and differences of sovereignty. Darwin.

9. Distinct kind.

This is notoriously known in some differences of break or fern. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

TO DIFFERENCE. v. a. [from the noun.]

To cause a difference; to make one thing not the same as another.

Molt are apt to seek all the differences of letters in those articulating motions; whereas several combinations of letters are framed by the very same motions of those organs which are commonly observed, and are differentiated by other concurrent causes. Holder.

Orals differenceth a civil and well cultivated region from a barren and desolate wilderness.
Ray.

D I F

We see nothing that differentiates the courage of Minotaurus from that of Serpenteus. Pope.

DIFFERENT. adj. [from differ.]

1. Distinct; not the same.

There are covered galleries that lead from the palace to five different churches. Addison.

2. Of contrary qualities.

The Britons change
Sweet native home for unaccustom'd air,
And other climes, where different food and soil Portend disempers. Philips.

3. Unlike; dissimilar.

Neither the shape of faces, nor the age, nor the colour, ought to be alike in all figures, any more than the hair; because men are as different from each other, as the regions in which they are born are different. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

Happiness consists in things which produce pleasure, and in the absence of those which cause any pain: now these, to different men, are very different things. Locke.

DIFFERENTIAL Method, is applied to the doctrine of infinitesimals, or infinitely small quantities, called the arithmetick of fluxions. It consists in descending from whole quantities to their infinitely small differences, and comparing together these infinitely small differences, of what kind soever they be: and from thence it takes the name of the differential calculus, or analysis of infinitesimals. Harris.

DIFFERENTLY. adv. [from different.] In a different manner.

He may consider how differently he is affected by the same thought, which presents itself in a great writer, from what he is when he finds it delivered by an ordinary genius. Addison.

DIFFERINGLY. adv. [from differing.]
In a different manner.

Such protuberant and concave parts of a surface may remit the light so differing, as to vary a colour. Boyle.

DIFFICIL. adj. [difficilis, Latin.]

1. Difficult; hard; not easy; not obvious. Little used.

That that should give motion to an unweildy bulk, which itself hath neither bulk nor motion, is of as difficult apprehension as any mystery in nature. Glanville's Scepht.

Latin was not more difficult,
Than to a blackbird 'tis to whistle. Hudibras.

2. Scrupulous; hard to be persuaded.

The cardinal finding the pope difficult in granting the dispensation, doth use it as a principal argument, concerning the king's merit, that he had touched none of those deniers which had been levied by popes in England. Bacon.

DIFFICILNESS. n. f. [from difficil.] Difficulty to be persuaded; incomppliance; impracticability. A word not in use,
but proper.

There be that in their nature do not affect the good of others: the lighter sort of malignity turneth but to a crossness, or frowardness, or aptness to oppose, or diffidence, or the like;
but the deeper sort, to envy and mere mischief.
Bacon.

DIFFICULT. adj. [difficilis, Latin.]

1. Hard; not easy; not facil.

It is difficult in the eyes of this people. Zacher.

2. Troublesome; vexatious.

3. Hard to please; peevish; morose.

DIFFICULTLY. adv. [from difficult.]
Hardly; with difficulty; not easily.

A man, who has always indulged himself in the full enjoyment of his station, will difficultly be persuaded to think any methods unjust that offer to continue it. Rogers's Sermons.

DIFFICULTY. n. f. [from difficilis; difficulté, French.]

1. Hardness; contrariety to easiness or facility.

The religion which, by this covenant, we engage ourselves to observe, is a work of labour and difficulty; a service that requires our greatest care and attention. Rogers.

2. That which is hard to accomplish; that which is not easy.

They mistake difficulties for impossibilities: a pernicious mistake certainly; and the more pernicious, for that men are seldom convinced of it, till their convictions do them no good. South.

3. Distress; opposition.

Thus, by degrees, he rose to Jove's imperial seat: Thus difficulties prove a soul legitimately great. Dryden.

4. Perplexity in affairs; uneasiness of circumstances.

They lie under some difficulties by reason of the emperor's displeasure, who has forbidden their manufactures. Addison on Italy.

5. Objection; cavil.

Men should consider, that raising difficulties concerning the mysteries in religion, cannot make them more wise, learned, or virtuous. Swift.

TO DIFFIDE. v. n. [diffido, Latin.]

To distrust; to have no confidence in.

With hope and fear

The woman did the new solution hear:

The man diffides in his own augury,

And doubts the gods. Dryden.

DIFFIDENCE. n. f. [from diffide.]

1. Distrust; want of confidence in others.

No man almost thought himself secure, and men durst scarce commune or talk one with another; but there was a general diffidence every where. Bacon's Henry VII.

You have brought scandal

To Israel, diffidence of God, and doubt

In feeble hearts, propense enough before

To waver. Milton's Agamemnon.

2. Doubt; want of confidence in ourselves.

If the evidence of its being, or that this is its true sense, be only on probable proofs, our assent can reach no higher than an assurance or diffidence arising from the more or less apparent probability of the proofs. Locke.

Be silent always when you doubt your sense;

And speak, though sure, with seeming diffidence. Pope.

Whatsoever atheists think on, or whatsoever they look on, all do administer some reasons for suspicion and diffidence; lest possibly they may be in the wrong; and then it is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God. Bentley.

DIFFIDENT. adj. [from diffide.]

1. Distrustful; doubting others.

Be not diffident

Of wisdom; she deserts thee not, if thou

Dismiss not her, when most thou need'st her aid. Milton.

Many speaks of the Sereas, the same people with the Chinese, as being very shy and diffident

in their manner of dealing. Arbuthnot.

2. Doubtful of an event, used of things; uncertain.

I was really so diffident of it, as to let it lie by me these two years, just as you now see it. Pope.

3. Doubtful of himself; not confident.

I am not so confident of my own sufficiency, as not willingly to admit the counsel of others; but yet I am not so diffident of myself, as brutishly to submit to any man's dictates. King Charles.

Distress makes the humble heart diffident.

Clarissa.

TO DIFFIND. v. a. [diffindo, Latin.]

To cleave in two; to split. Di.

DIFFUSION. n. f. [diffusio, Latin.] The act of cleaving or splitting. Di.

DIFFLATION. n. f. [diffiare, Lat.] The act of scattering with a blast of wind. Di.

DIFFLUENCE. } n. f. [from diffuso, Lat.]

DIFFLUENCY. } The quality of falling away on all sides; the effect of fluidity; the contrary to consistency.

Ice is water congealed by the frigidity of the air, whereby it acquireth no new form, but rather a consistency or determination of its diffuency; and smitteth not its essence, but condition of fluidity. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

DIFFLUENT. adj. [diffuens, Lat.] Flowing every way; not consistent; not fixed.

DIFFFORM. adj. [from forma, Latin.]

Contrary to uniform; having parts of different structure; dissimilar; unlike; irregular: as, a difform flower, one of which the leaves are unlike each other.

The unequal refractions of difform rays proceed not from any contingent irregularities; such as are veins, an uneven polish, or fortuitous position of the pores of glass. Newton.

DIFFORMITY. n. f. [from difform.] Diversity of form; irregularity; dissimilitude.

While they murmur against the present disposition of things, they desire in them a difformity from the primitive rule, and the idea of that mind that formed all things best. Brown.

DIFFRA'NCHISEMENT. n. f. [franchise, French.] The act of taking away the privileges of a city.

TO DIFFUSE. v. a. [diffusus, Latin.]

1. To pour out upon a plane, so that the liquor may run every way; to pour without particular direction.

When these waters began to rise at first, long before they could swell to the height of the mountains, they would diffuse themselves every way. Burnet's Theory.

2. To spread; to scatter; to disperse.

Wisdom had ordain'd Good out of evil to create; instead Of spirits malign, a better race to bring Into their vacant room, and thence diffuse His good to worlds, and ages, infinite. Milton.

No sect wants its apostles to propagate and diffuse it. Decay of Piety.

A chief renown'd in war, Whose race shall bear aloft the Latin name, And through the conquer'd world diffuse our fame. Dryden.

His eyes diffus'd a venerable grace,

And charity itself was in his face. Dryden.

DIFFUSE. adj. [diffusus, Latin.]

1. Scattered; widely spread.

2. Copious; not concise.

DIFFUSED. participial adj. [from diffuse.]

This word seems to have signified, in Shakspeare's time, the same as wild, uncouth, irregular.

Let them from forth a sawpit rush at once, With some diffused song. Shakspeare.

He grows like savages,

To swearing and stern looks, diffus'd attire,

And every thing that seems unnatural. Shakspeare.

DIFFUSEDLY. adv. [from diffused.]

Widely; dispersedly; in manner of that which is spread every way.

DIFFUSEDNESS. n. f. [from diffused.]

The state of being diffused; dispersion.

DIFFUSELY. adv. [from diffuse.]

1. Widely; extensively.

2. Copiously; not concisely.

DIFFUSION. n. f. [from diffuse.]

1. Dispersion; the state of being scattered every way.

Whereas all bodies act either by the communication of their nature, or by the impressions and signatures of their motion, the diffusion of species visible seemeth to participate more of the former operation, and the species audible of the latter. Bacon's Natural History.

A sheet of very well streaked marbled paper did not cast distinct colours upon the wall, nor throw its light with an equal diffusion; but threw its beams, unobscured and bright, to this and that part of the wall. Boyle on Colours.

2. Copiousness; exuberance of style.

DIFFUSIVE. adj. [from diffuse.]

1. Having the quality of scattering any thing every way.

Diffusive of themselves, where'er they pass They make that warmth in others they expect:

Their valour works like bodies on a glass,

And does its image on their men project. Dryden.

2. Scattered; dispersed; having the quality of suffering diffusion.

All liquid bodies are diffusive; for their parts, being in motion, have no connexion, but glide and fall off any way. Burnet.

No man is of so general and diffusive a lust, as to prosecute his amours all the world over. South.

The stars, no longer overlaid with weight,

Exert their heads from underneath the mass,

And upward shoot, and kindle as they pass,

And with diffusive light adorn their heav'nly place. Dryden.

Cherish'd with hope, and fed with joy it grows;

Its cheerful buds their opening bloom disclose,

And round the happy soul diffusive odour flows. Prior.

3. Extended.

They are not agreed among themselves where infallibility is seated; whether in the pope alone, or a council alone, or in both together, or in the diffusive body of christians. Tidwell.

DIFFUSIVELY. adv. [from diffusive.]

Widely; extensively; every way.

DIFFUSIVENESS. n. f. [from diffusive.]

1. Extension; dispersion; the power of diffusing; the state of being diffused.

2. Want of conciseness; large compass of expression.

The fault that I find with a modern legend, is its diffusiveness: you have sometimes the whole side of a medal over-run with it. Addison on Med.

TO DIG. v. a. pret. dug, or digged; part.

pass. dug, or digged. [dic, Saxon, a ditch; dyger, Danish, to dig.]

1. To pierce with a spade.

Then said he unto me, Son of man, dig now in the wall; and when I had digged in the wall, I beheld a door. Ezekiel.

2. To form by digging.

Seek with heart and mouth to build up the walls of Jerusalem, which you have broken down; and to fill up the mines that you have digged, by craft and subtlety, to overthrow the same. Whitgift.

He built towers in the desert, and digged many wells; for he had much cattle. 2 Chronicles.

3. To cultivate the ground by turning it with a spade.

The walls of your garden, without their furniture, look as ill as those of your house; so that you cannot dig up your garden too often. Temple.

Be first to dig the ground, be first to burn

The branches lost. Dryden's Virgil.

4. To pierce with a sharp point.

A ravenous vulture in his open'd side

Her crooked beak and cruel talons tried;

DIG

Still for the growing liver digg'd his breast,
The growing liver still supplied the feast. Dryd.

5. To gain by digging.

It is digg'd out of even the highest mountains, and all parts of the earth contingently; as the pyrites. Woodward.

Nor was the ground alone requir'd to bear
Her annual income to the crooked share;
But greedy mortals, rummaging her store,
Digg'd from her entrails first the precious ore.
Dryden's Ovid.

To DIG. v. n. To work with a spade; to work in making holes, or turning the ground.

They long for death, but it cometh not; and dig for it more than for hid treasures. Job.

The Italians have often dug into lands, described in old authors as the places where statues or obelisks stood, and seldom failed of success.
Adison's Travels.

To DIG up. v. a. To throw up that which is covered with earth.

If I digg'd up thy forefathers graves,
And hung their rotten coffins up in chains,
It would not shake mine ire. Shakespeare.

Di'GAMY. n. f. [dygama.] Second mar- riage; marriage to a second wife after the death of the first: as bigamy, having two wives at once.

Dr. Champny only proves, that archbishop Cranmer was twice married; which is not denied: but brings nothing to prove that such bigamy, or dygamy rather, deprives a bishop of the lawful use of his power of ordaining.
Bishop Ferne.

Di'GERENT. adj. [dygerens, Latin.] That has the power of digesting, or causing digestion. Diſt.

Di'GEST. n. f. [digesta, Latin.] The pandect of the civil law, containing the opinions of the ancient lawyers.

I had a purpose to make a particular digest, or recompilment to the laws of mine own nation.
Bacon.

Laws in the digest shew that the Romans applied themselves to trade. Arbutnot on Coins.

To DIGEST. v. a. [digero, digestum, Latin.]

1. To distribute into various classes or re- positories; to range or dispose methodi- cally.

2. To concoct in the stomach, so as that the various particles of food may be ap- plied to their proper use.

If little faults, proceeding on distemper, Shall not be wink'd at, how shall we stretch our eye,
When capital crimes chew'd, swallow'd, and digested, Appear? Shakespeare's Henry v.

Each then has organs to digest his food;
One to beget, and one receive, the brood. Prior.

3. To soften by heat, as in a boiler, or in a dunghil: a chymical term.

4. To range methodically in the mind; to apply knowledge by meditation to its proper use.

Chosen friends, with sense refin'd,
Learning digested well. Thomson.

5. To reduce to any plan, scheme, or method.

Our play
Leaps o'er the vaunt and firrings of those heels,
'Ginning i' th' middle: starting thence away
To what may be digested in a play. Shakespeare.

6. To receive without loathing or repug- nance; to not reject.

First, let us go to dinner.
—Nay, let me praise you while I have a stomach.
—Nay, pray thee, let it serve for table-talk;

DIG

Then, howsoever thou speak'st, 'mongst other things

I shall digest it. Shakespeare's Mr. of Ven.
The pleasure of numbers is, that rudeness and barbarism might the better taste and digest the lessons of civility. Peacham.

7. To receive and enjoy.

Cornwall and Albany,
With my two daughters dowers, digest the third.
Shakespeare.

8. [In chirurgery.] To dispose a wound to generate pus in order to a cure.

To DIGEST. v. n. To generate matter, as a wound, and tend to a cure.

DIGESTER. n. f. [from digest.]

1. He that digests or disposes.

2. He that digests or concocts his food.

People that are bilious and fat, rather than lean, are great eaters and ill digesters. Arbut.

3. A strong vessel or engine, contrived by M. Papin, wherein to boil, with a very strong heat, any bony substances, so as to reduce them into a fluid state.

4. That which causes or strengthens the concoctive power.

Rice is of excellent use for all illnesses of the stomach, a great restorer of health, and a great digestor. Temple.

DIGESTIBLE. adj. [from digest.] Capa- ble of being digested or concocted.

Those medicines that purge by stool are, at the first, not digestible by the stomach, and therefore move immediately downwards to the guts.
Bacon's Natural History.

DIGESTION. n. f. [from digest.]

1. The act of digesting or concocting food in the stomach.

Now good digestion wait on appetite,
And health on both. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Digestion is a fermentation begun, because there are all the requisites of such a fermentation;
heat, air, and motion: but it is not a complete fermentation, because that requires a greater time than the continuance of the aliment in the stomach: vegetable putrefaction resembles very much animal digestion. Arbutnot on Aliments.

Quantity of food cannot be determined by measures and weights, or any general Lessian rules; but must vary with the vigour or decays of age or of health, and the use or disuse of air or of exercise, with the changes of appetite; and then, by what every man may find or suspect of the present strength or weakness of digestion.
Temple.

Every morsel to a satisfied hunger, is only a new labour to a tired digestion. South.

2. The preparation of matter by a chymical heat.

We conceive, indeed, that a perfect good concoction, or digestion, or maturation of some metals, will produce gold. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
Did chymick chance the furnaces prepare,
Raise all the labour-houses of the air,
And lay crude vapours in digestion there? Blackmore.

3. Reduction to a plan; the act of me- thodising; the maturation of a design.

The digestion of the counsels in Sweden is made in senate, consisting of forty counsellors, who are generally the greatest men. Temple.

4. The act of disposing a wound to gene- rate matter.

5. The disposition of a wound or sore to generate matter.

The first stage of healing, or the discharge of matter, is by surgeons called digestion. Sharp.

DIGESTIVE. adj. [from digest.]

1. Having the power to cause digestion, or to strengthen the stomach.

DIG

A chillsfactory menstruum, or a digestive preparation, drawn from species or individuals, whose stomachs peculiarly dissolve lapideous bodies. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. Capable by heat to soften and subdue.

The earth and sun were in that very state; the one active, piercing, and digestive, by its heat;
the other passive, receptive, and stored with materials for such a production. Hale.

3. Methodising; adjusting.

To business, ripen'd by digestive thought,
This future rule is into method brought. Dryd.

DIGESTIVE. n. f. [from digest.] An ap- plication which disposes a wound to generate matter.

I dressed it with digestives. Wifeman.

DIGESTURE. n. f. Concoction. Not used.

Neither tie yourself always to eat meats of easy digesture; such as veal, sweetbreads. Marry.

DIGGER. n. f. [from dig.] One that opens the ground with a spade.

When we visited mines, we have been told by diggers, that even when the sky seemed clear, there would suddenly arise a steam so thick, that it would put out their candles. Boyle.

To DIGIT. v. a. [iuxta, to prepare, to regulate, Saxon.]

1. To dress; to deck; to bedeck; to embellish; to adorn. It seems always to signify the past: the particle passive is digit, as *digit*ed in Hudibras is per- haps improper.

Let my due feet never fail
To walk the studious cloisters pale;
And love the high embow'd roof,
With antick pillar, massy proof;
And storied windows richly digit,
Casting a dim religious light. Milton.

Just to the proud insulping laſe
Array'd and *digit*ed Hudibras. Hudibras.

2. To put on.

On his head his dreadful hat he digit,
Which maketh him invisible to fight. Hubb. Tale.

Di'GIT. n. f. [digitus, Latin.]

1. The measure of length containing three fourths of an inch.

If the inverted tube of mercury be but twenty-five digits high, or somewhat more, the quick-silver will not fall, but remain suspended in the tube, because it cannot press the subjacent mercury with so great a force as doth the incumbent cylinder of the air, reaching thence to the top of the atmosphere. Boyle's Spring of the Air.

2. The twelfth part of the diameter of the sun or moon.

3. Any of the numbers expressed by single figures; any number to ten: so called from counting upon the fingers.

Not only the numbers seven and nine, from considerations alibiſe, have been extolled by moſt, but all or moſt of other digits have been as myſtically applauded. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

Di'GITATED. adj. [from digitus, Latin.]

Branched out into divisions like fingers:
as a digitated leaf is a leaf composed of many small leaves.

For animals multiformous, or such as are di-gitated, or have several divisions in their feet, there are but two that are uniparous; that is, men and elephants. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

DIGLADIATION. n. f. [digladiatio, Lat.] A combat with swords; any quarrel or contest.

Aristotle seems purposely to intend the eberishing of controversial digladiations, by his own affectation of an intricate obscurity. Glanville.

Di'GNIFIED. adj. [from dignify.] In- vested with some dignity: it is used chiefly of the clergy.

DIG

Abbots are filled dignified clerks, as having some dignity in the church. Ayliffe's Parergon.

DIGNIFICATION. n. f. [from dignify.]

Exaltation.

I grant that where a noble and ancient descent and merit meet in any man, it is a double dignification of that person. Walton's Angler.

TO DIGNIFY. v. a. [from dignus and facio, Latin.]

1. To advance; to prefer; to exalt. Used chiefly of the clergy.

2. To honour; to adorn; to give lustre to; to improve by some adventitious excellence, or honourable distinction.

Such a day,
So fought, so follow'd, and so fairly won,
Came not till now to dignify the times
Since Caesar's fortunes! Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Not that we think us worthy such a guest,
But that your worth will dignify our feast.
Ben Jonson.

No turbot dignify my boards;
But gudgeons, flounders, what my Thames affords. Pope.

DIGNITARY. n. f. [from dignus, Latin.]

A clergyman advanced to some dignity, to some rank above that of a parochial priest.

If there be any dignitaries, whose preferments are perhaps not liable to the accusation of superiority, they may be persons of superior merit. Swift.

DIGNITY. n. f. [from dignitas, Latin.]

1. Rank of elevation.

Angels are not any where spoken so highly of as our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and are not in dignity equal to him. Hooker.

2. Grandeur of mien; elevation of aspect.

Some men have a native dignity, which will procure them more regard by a look, than others can obtain by the most imperious commands. Clarissa.

3. Advancement; preferment; high place.

Faster than spring-time show'rs comes thought on thought,
And not a thought but thinks on dignity. Shakspeare.

For those of old,
And these late dignities heap'd up to them. Shakspeare.

4. [Among ecclesiasticks.] By a dignity we understand that promotion or preferment to which any jurisdiction is annexed.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

5. Maxims; general principles: axioma deſai.

The sciences concluding from dignities, and principles known by themselves, receive not satisfaction from probable reasons, much less from bare assertions. Brown.

6. [In astrology.] The planet is in dignity when it is in any sign.

DIGNOTION. n. f. [from dignosco, Lat.]

Distinction; distinguishing mark.

That temperamental dignations, and conjecture of prevalent humours, may be collected from spots in our nails, we are not averse to concede. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

TO DIGRESS. v. n. [from digressus, Latin.]

1. To turn aside out of the road.

2. To depart from the main design of a discourse, or chief tenour of an argument.

In the pursuit of an argument there is hardly room to digress into a particular definition, as often as a man varies the signification of any term. Locke.

3. To wander; to expatiate.

It seemeth (to digress no farther) that the Tartarians, spreading so far, cannot be the Israelites. Brewerwood.

4. To go out of the right way, or common track; to transgress; to deviate.

Not in use.

I am come to keep my word,
Though in some part am forced to digress,
Which at more leisure I will go execute
As you shall well be satisfied. Shakspeare.

Thy noble shape is but a form of wax,
Digressing from the value of a man. Shakspeare.

DIGRESSION. n. f. [from digressio, Latin.]

1. A passage deviating from the main tenour or design of a discourse.

The good man thought so much of his late conceived commonwealth, that all other matters were but digressions to him. Sidney.

He, the knew, would intermix
Grateful digressions, and solve high dispute
With conjugal caresses. Milton.

Here some digression I must make, t' accuse Thee, my forgetful and ungrateful mule. Denham.

To content and fill the eye of the understanding, the best authors sprinkle their works with pleasing digressions, with which they recreate the minds of their readers. Dryden.

2. Deviation.

The digression of the sun is not equal; but, near the equinoctial intersections, it is right and greater; near the solstices more oblique and lesser. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

DIJUDICATION. n. f. [from dijudicatio, Lat.]

Judicial distinction.

DIKE. n. f. [dic, Saxon; dyk, Erse.]

1. A channel to receive water.

The dykes are fill'd, and with a roaring sound
The rising rivers float the nether ground. Dryden.

The king of dykes! than whom no sluice of mud
With deeper fable bless the silver flood. Pope.

2. A mound to hinder inundations.

God, that breaks up the flood-gates of so great a deluge, and all the art and industry of man is not sufficient to raise up dykes and ramparts against it. Cowley.

TO DILACERATE. v. a. [from dilacerare, Latin.]

To tear; to rend; to force in two.

The infant, at the accomplished period, struggling to come forth, dilacerates and breaks those parts which restrained him before. Brown.

DILACERATION. n. f. [from dilaceratio, Latin.]

The act of rending in two.

The greatest sensation of pain is by the obstruction of the small vessels, and dilaceration of the nervous fibres. Arbuthnot.

TO DILANIATE. v. a. [from dilaniare, Lat.]

To tear; to rend in pieces.

Rather than they would dilaniate the entrails of their own mother, and expose her thereby to be ravished, they met half way in a gallant kind. Howell's England's Tears.

TO DILAPIDATE. v. n. [from dilapido, Latin.]

To go to ruin; to fall by decay.

DILAPIDATION. n. f. [from dilapidatio, Lat.]

The incumbent's suffering the chancel, or any other edifices of his ecclesiastical living, to go to ruin or decay, by neglecting to repair the same: and it likewise extends to his committing, or suffering to be committed, any wilful waste in or upon the glebe-woods, or any other inheritance of the church.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

'Tis the duty of all church-wardens to prevent the dilapidations of the chancel and mansion-house belonging to the rector or vicar. Ayliffe.

DILATABILITY. n. f. [from dilatatio, Lat.]

The quality of admitting extension.

We take notice of the wonderful dilatability or extensiveness of the gullets of serpents: I have taken two adult mice out of the stomach of an adder, whose neck was not bigger than my little finger. Ray.

By this continual contractibility and dilatability, by different degrees of heat, the air is kept in a constant motion. Arbuthnot.

DILATABLE. adj. [from dilate.]

Capable of extension.

The windpipe divides itself into a great number of branches, called bronchia: these end in small air bladders, dilatable and contractible, capable to be inflated by the admission of air, and to subside at the expulsion of it. Arbuthnot.

DILATATION. n. f. [from dilatatio, Lat.]

1. The act of extending into greater space: opposed to contraction.

The motions of the tongue, by contraction and dilatation, are so easy and so subtle, that you can hardly conceive or distinguish them aright. Holder.

2. The state of being extended; the state in which the parts are at more distance from each other.

Joy causeth a cheerfulness and vigour in the eyes; fingering, leaping, dancing, and sometimes tears: all these are the effects of the dilatation, and coming forth of the spirits into the outward parts. Baron's Natural History.

The image of the sun should be drawn out into an oblong form, either by a dilatation of every ray, or by any other casual inequality of the refractions. Newton.

TO DILATE. v. a. [from dilato, Latin.]

1. To extend; to spread out; to enlarge: opposed to contract.

But ye thereby much greater glory gate,
Than had ye suited with a prince's peer;
For now your light doth more itself dilate,
And in my darkness greater doth appear. Spenser.

Satan alarm'd,
Collecting all his might, dilated flood,
Like Tenebris, or Atlas, unremov'd. Milton.

Opener of mine eyes,
Dim-est; dilated spirits, ampler heart,
And growing up to godhead: which for thee
Chiefly I sought; without thee can despise. Milton.

Through all the air his sounding strings dilate

Sorrow, like that which touch'd our hearts of late. Waller.

Diffus'd, it rises in a higher sphere;
Dilates its drops, and softens into air. Prior.

I mark the various fury of the winds;
These neither seasons guide, nor order bind:
They now dilate and now contract their force;
Various their speed, but endless is their course. Prior.

The second refraction would spread the rays one way as much as the first doth another, and so dilate the image in breadth as much as the first doth in length. Newton.

2. To relate at large; to tell diffusely and copiously.

But he would not endure that woful theme
For to dilate at large; but urged sore,
With piercing words, and painful implore,
Him haily to arise. Fairy Queen.

I observing,
Took once a pliant hour, and found good means
To draw from her a prayer of earnest heart
That I would all my pilgrimage dilate,
Whereof by parcels she had something heard,
But not distinctively. Shakspeare's Othello.

TO DILATE. v. n.

1. To widen; to grow wide.

His heart dilates and glories in his strength. Addison.

2. To speak largely and copiously.

It may be behovous for princes, in matters of grace, to transact the same publicly, and by themselves; or their ministers to dilate upon it, and improve their lustre, by any addition or eloquence of speech. Cicero's Orations.

DILATOR. n. f. [from dilate.] That which widens or extends.

The buccinators, or blowers up of the cheeks, and the dilators of the nose, are too strong in choleric people. Arbuthnot.

DILATORINESS. n. f. [from dilatory.] The quality of being dilatory; slowness; sluggishness.

DILATORY. adj. [dilatatoire, Fr. dilatatorius, Lat.] Tardy; slow; given to procrastination; addicted to delay; sluggish; loitering.

An inferior council, after former tedious suits in a higher court, would be but dilatory, and so to little purpose. Hayward.

What wound did ever heal but by degrees? Thou know'st we work by wit, and not by witchcraft?

And wit depends on dilatory time. Shakspeare.

These cardinals trifle with me; I abhor

This dilatory stoic, and tricks of Rome. Shakspeare.

Dilatory fortune plays the jilt

With the brave, noble, honest, gallant man,

To show herself away on fools and knaves.

A dilatory temper commits innumerable cruelties without design. Addison's Spectator.

DILECTION. n. f. [dilectio, Latin.] The act of loving; kindness.

So free is Christ's dilection, that the grand condition of our felicity is our belief. Boyle.

DILEMMA. n. f. [dilemma.]

1. An argument equally conclusive by contrary suppositions. A young rhetorician applied to an old sophist to be taught the art of pleading, and bargained for a certain reward to be paid, when he should gain a cause. The master sued for his reward, and the scholar endeavoured to elude his claim by a dilemma: If I gain my cause, I shall withhold your pay, because the judge's award will be against you; if I lose it, I may withhold it, because I shall not yet have gained a cause. On the contrary, says the master, if you gain your cause, you must pay me, because you are to pay me when you gain a cause; if you lose it, you must pay me, because the judge will award it.

A dilemma, that Morton used to raise benevolence, some called his fork, and some his crotch. Bacon's Henry VII.

Hope, whose weak being ruin'd is Alike if it succeed, and if it miss;
Whom good or ill does equally confound,
And both the horns of fate's dilemma wound.

Conway.

2. A difficult or doubtful choice; a vexatious alternative.

A strong dilemma in a desperate case!

To act with infamy, or quit the place. Swift.

A dire dilemma; either way I'm sped;

If foes they write, if friends they read, me dead.

Pope.

DILIGENCE. n. f. [diligentia, Latin.] Industry; assiduity; constancy in business; continuance of endeavour; uninterrupted application; the contrary to idleness.

Do thy diligence to come shortly unto me.

2 Timothy.

Brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure.

2 Peter.

DILIGENT. adj. [diligens, Latin.]

1. Constant in application; persevering in endeavour; assiduous; not idle; not negligent; not lazy.

Seek thou a man diligent in his business, he shall stand before kings. Proverbs.

2. Constantly applied; prosecuted with activity and perseverance; assiduous. And the judges shall make diligent inquisition. Deuteronomy.

DILIGENTLY. adv. [from diligent.] With assiduity; with heed and perseverance; not carelessly; not idly; not negligently.

If you inquire not attentively and diligently, you shall never be able to discern a number of mechanical motions. Bacon.

The ancients have diligently examined in what consists the beauty of good postures. Dryden.

DILL. n. f. [dile, Saxon.] An herb, which hath a slender, fibrose, annual root; the leaves are like those of fennel; the seeds are oval, plain, streaked, and bordered.

Dill is raised of seed, which is ripe in August.

Mortimer.

DILUCID. adj. [dilucidus, Latin.]

1. Clear; not opaque.

2. Clear; plain; not obscure.

To DILUCIDATE. v. a. [from dilucidare, Latin.] To make clear or plain; to explain; to free from obscurity.

I shall not extenuate, but explain and dilucidate, according to the custom of the ancients.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

DILUCIDATION. n. f. [from dilucidatio, Latin.] The act of making clear; explanation; exposition.

DILUENT. adj. [diluens, Latin.] Having the power to thin and attenuate other matter.

DILUENT. n. f. [from the adjective.] That which thins other matter.

There is no real diluent but water: every fluid is diluent, as it contains water in it. Arbuthnot.

To DILUTE. v. a. [diluo, Latin.]

1. To make thin; to attenuate by the admixture of other parts.

Drinking a large dose of diluted tea, as he was ordered by a physician, he got to bed.

Locke.

The aliment ought to be thin to dilute, demulcent to temper, or acid to subdue. Arbuth.

2. To make weak.

The chamber was dark, lest these colours should be diluted and weakened by the mixture of any adventitious light. Newton.

DILUTE. adj. Thin; attenuated.

If the red and blue colours were more dilute and weak, the distance of the images would be less than an inch; and if they were more intense and full, that distance would be greater.

Newton.

DILUTER. n. f. [from dilute.] That which makes any thing else thin.

Water is the only diluter, and the best dissolvent of most of the ingredients of our aliment.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

DILUTION. n. f. [dilutio, Latin.] The act of making any thing thin or weak.

Opposite to dilution is coagulation or thickening, which is performed by dissipating the most liquid parts by heat, or by insinuating some substances, which make the parts of the fluid cohere more strongly.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

DILUVIAN. adj. [from diluvium, Latin.]

Relating to the deluge.

Suppose that this diluvian lake should rise to the mountain tops in one place, and not diffuse itself equally into all countries about.

Burnet.

DIM. adj. [dimme, Saxon; dy, Welsh; dow, Erse.]

1. Not having a quick sight; not seeing clearly.

For her true form how can my spark discern, Which, dim by nature, art did never clear?

Davies.

2. Dull of apprehension.

The understanding is dim, and cannot by its natural light discover spiritual truths. Rogers.

3. Not clearly seen; obscure; imperfectly discovered.

We might be able to aim at some dim and seeming conception, how matter might begin to exist by the power of that eternal first Being.

Locke.

Something, as dim to our internal view, Is thus perhaps the cause of all we do.

Pope.

4. Obscuring the act of vision; not luminous; somewhat dark.

Her face right wondrous fair did seem to be, That her broad beauty's beam great brightness threw

Through the dim shade, that all men might it see.

Spenser.

To DIM. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To cloud; to darken; to hinder from a full perception of light, and free exercise of vision.

As where the Almighty's lightning brand does light,

It dims the dazed eyes, and daunts the senses quite.

Spenser's Fairy Queen.

It hath been observed by the ancients, that much use of Venus doth dim the sight; and yet eunuchs, which are unable to generate, are nevertheless also dim sighted.

Bacon.

Every one declares against blindness, and yet who almost is not fond of that which dims his sight?

Locke.

For thee I dim these eyes, and stuff this head, With all such reading as was never read.

Pope.

2. To make less bright; to obscure.

A ship that through the ocean wide, By conduct of some star, doth make her way, When as a storm hath dimm'd her trusty guide, Out of her course doth wander far astray.

Spenser.

To wait the dimming of our shining star. Shakspeare.

Thus while he spake, each passion dimm'd his face,

Milton.

Thrice chang'd. The principal figure in a picture is like a king among his courtiers, who dim all his attendants.

Dryden.

DIMENSION. n. f. [dimensio, Latin.]

Space contained in any thing; bulk; extent; capacity. It is seldom used but in the plural. The three dimensions are length, breadth, and depth.

He tried

The tomb, and found the straight dimensions wide.

Dryden.

My gentleman was measuring my walls, and taking the dimensions of the room.

Swift.

To DIMINISH. v. a. [diminuo, Latin.]

1. To make less by abscission or detrac-tion of any part: the opposite to increase.

That we call good which is apt to cause or increase pleasure, or diminish pain in us. Locke.

2. To impair; to lessen; to degrade.

Impiously they thought

Thee to diminish, and from thee withdraw
The number of thy worshippers. Milton.

3. To take any thing from that to which it belongs: the contrary to add.

Nothing was diminished from the safety of the king by the imprisonment of the duke. Hayward.
Ye shall not add unto the word which I command you, neither shall you diminish aught from it. Deuteronomy.

- To DIMINISH. v. n. To grow less; to be impaired.

What judgment I had, increases rather than diminishes; and thoughts, such as they are, come crowding in so fast upon me, that my only difficulty is to chuse or to reject. Dryden.

Crete's ample fields diminish to our eye;
Before the Boreas blasts the vessels dry. Pope.

- DIMINISHINGLY*. adv. [from diminish.]

In a manner tending to vilify, or lessen.
I never heard him censure, or to much as speak diminishingly of any one that was absent. Locke.

- DIMINU'TION*. n. f. [diminutio, Latin.]

1. The act of making less: opposed to augmentation.

The one is not capable of any diminution or augmentation at all by men; the other apt to admit both. Hooker.

2. The state of growing less: opposed to increase.

The gravitating power of the sun is transmitted through the vast bodies of the planets without any diminution, so as to act upon all their parts, to their very centres, with the same force, and according to the same laws, as if the part upon which it acts were not surrounded with the body of the planet. Newton.

Finite and infinite seem to be looked upon as the modes of quantity, and to be attributed primarily to those things which are capable of increase or diminution. Locke.

3. Discredit; loss of dignity; degradation.

Gladly to thee
Heroick laurel'd Eugene yields the prime;
Nor thinks it diminution to be rank'd
In military honour next. Philips.

4. Deprivation of dignity; injury of reputation.

Make me wife by thy truth, for my own soul's salvation, and I shall not regard the world's opinion or diminution of me. King Charles.

They might raise the reputation of another, though they are a diminution to his. Addison.

5. [In architecture.] The contraction of the diameter of a column, as it ascends.

- DIMINUTIVE*. adj. [diminutivus, Latin.] Small; little; narrow; contracted.

The poor wren,
The most diminutive of birds, will fight,
Her young ones in her nest, against the owl. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

It is the interest of mankind, in order to the advance of knowledge, to be sensible they have yet attained it but in poor and diminutive measure. Glauville's Scepis.

The light of man's understanding is but a short, diminutive, contracted light, and looks not beyond the present. South.

If the ladies should once take a liking to such a diminutive race of lovers, we should, in a little time, see mankind epitomized, and the whole species in miniature. Addison.

They know how weak and awkward many of those little diminutive discourses are. Watts.

- DIMINUTIVE*. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. A word formed to express littleness: as lapillus, in Latin, a little stone; maisonette, in French, a little house; maniken, in English, a little man.

He afterwards proving a dainty and effeminate youth, was commonly called, by the diminutive of his name, Peterkin or Perkin. Bacon.

Sim, while but Sim, in good repute did live;
Was then a knave, but in diminutive. Cotton.

2. A small thing. Not in use.

Follow his chariot; monster-like, he shews
For poor'th diminutives, for doits! Shakespeare.

- DIMINUTIVELY*. adv. [from diminutive.] In a diminutive manner.

- DIMINUTIVENESS*. n. f. [from diminutive.] Smallness; littleness; pettyness; want of bulk; want of dignity.

- DIMISH*. adj. [from dim.] Somewhat dim; somewhat obscure.

'Tis true, but let it not be known,
My eyes are somewhat dimish grown;
For nature, always in the right,
To your decays adapts my sight. Swift.

- DIMISSORY*. adj. [dimissorius, Latin.]

That by which a man is dismissed to another jurisdiction.

A bishop of another diocese ought neither to ordain or admit a clerk, without the consent of his own proper bishop, and without the letters dimissory. Ayliffe's Parergon.

- DIMITY*. n. f. A fine kind of fustian, or cloth of cotton.

I directed a trowze of fine dimity. Wifeman.

- DIMLY*. adv. [from dim.]

1. Not with a quick sight; not with a clear perception.

Unpeakable! who sit't above these heav'ns,
To us invisible, or dimly seen
In these thy lowest works. Milton.

2. Not brightly; not luminously.

In the beginning of our pumping the air, the match appeared well lighted, though it had almost filled the receiver with fumes; but by degrees it burnt more and more dimly. Boyle.

I saw th' angelick guards from earth ascend,
Griev'd they must now no longer man attend;
The beams about their temples dimly shone;
One would have thought the crime had been their own. Dryden.

- DIMNESS*. n. f. [from dim.]

1. Dulness of sight.

2. Want of apprehension; stupidity.

Answerable to this dimness of their perception, was the whole system and body of their religion. Decay of Piety.

3. Obscurity; not brightness.

- DIMPLE*. n. f. [dint, a hole; dintle, a little hole; by a careless pronunciation dimple. Skinner.] A small cavity or depression in the cheek, chin, or other part.

The dimple of the upper lip is the common measure of them all. Grew.

In her forehead's fair half-moon,
Love sits in open triumph crown'd;
He in the dimple of her chin,
In private state, by friends is seen. Prior.

- To DIMPLE. v. n. [from the noun.] To sink in small cavities, or little inequalities.

The wild waves master'd him, and suck'd him in;
And smiling eddies dimpled on the main. Dryden.

External smiles his emperours betray,
As shallow streams run dimpling all the way. Pope.

- DIMPLED*. adj. [from dimple.] Set with dimples.

On each side her Stood pretty dimpled boys like smiling Cupids. Shakespeare.

- DIMPLY*. adj. [from dimple.] Full of dimples; sinking in little inequalities.

As the smooth surface of the dimple flood
The silver-slipper'd virgin lightly trod. Warton.

- DIN*. n. f. [byn, a noise; bynan, to make a noise, Saxon; dyna, to thunder, Icelandic.] A loud noise; a violent and continued sound.

And all the way he roared as he went,
That all the forest with astonishment
Thereof did tremble; and the beasts therein
Fled fast away from that so dreadful din. Hubbard's Tale.

O, 'twas a din to fright a monster's ear;
To make an earthquake: sure, it was the roar
Of a whole herd of lions. Shakespeare's Tempest.

While the cock with lively din
Scatters the rear of darkness thin;
And to the flock, or the barn door,
Stoutly struts his dame before. Milton.

Now night over heav'n
Inducing darkness, grateful truce impos'd,
And silence, on the odious din of war. Milton.

How, while the troubled elements around,
Earth, water, air, the stunning din resound,
Thro' streams of smoke and adverse fire he rides,
While every shot is level'd at his sides. Smart.

Some independent ideas, of no alliance to one another, are, by education, custom, and the constant din of their party, so coupled in their minds, that they always appear there together. Locke.

- To DIN. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To stun with noise; to harass with clamour.

Rather live
To bait thee for his bread, and din your ears
With hungry cries. Orsney's Venice Preserved.

2. To impress with violent and continued noise.

What shall we do, if his majesty puts out a proclamation commanding us to take Wood's halfpence? This hath been often dinned in my ears. Swift.

- To DINE. v. n. [diner, Fr.] To eat the chief meal about the middle of the day.

Perhaps some merchant hath invited him,
And from the main he's somewhere gone to dinner:

Good filter, let us dine, and never fret. Shaks.

Myself, he, and my filter,

To-day did dine together. Shakespeare.

He would dine with him the next day. Clarendon.

Thus, of your heroes and brave boys,
With whom old Homer makes such noise,
The greatest actions I can find,
Are, that they did their work, and din'd. Prior.

- To DINE. v. a. To give a dinner to; to feed.

Boil this restoring root in gen'rous wine,
And set beside the door the sickly flock to dine. Dryden's Virgil.

- DINETICAL*. adj. [dineticus.] Whirling round; vertiginous.

Some of late have concluded, from spots in the sun, which appear and disappear again, that, besides the revolution it maketh with its axis, it hath also a dinetic motion, and rolls upon its own poles. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

A spherical figure is most commodious for dinetic motion, or revolution upon its own axis. Ray.

- To DING. v. a. pret. dung. [dringen, Dutch.]

1. To dash with violence.

2. To impress with force.

- To DING. v. n. To bluster; to bounce; to huff. A low word.

DIN

Heruffs and dings, because we will not spend the little we have left, to get him the title of lord Strut. Arbutnot.

DING-DONG. n. f. A word by which the sound of bells is imitated.

Let us all ring fancy's knell;
Ding, dong, bell. Shakespeare.

DINGLE. n. f. [from ben, or bin, a hollow, Saxon.] A hollow between hills; a dale.

I know each lane, and every alley green,
Dingle or bushy dell of this wild wood;
And every bosky bourn from side to side,
My daily walks and ancient neighbourhood. Milton.

DININGROOM. n. f. [dine and room.] The principal apartment of the house; the room where entertainments are made.

He went out from the dining-room before he had fallen into error by the intemperance of his meat, or the deluge of drink. Taylor.

DINNER. n. f. [diner, French.] The chief meal; the meal eaten about the middle of the day.

Let me not stay a jot for dinner:
Go, get it ready. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Before dinner and supper, as often as it is convenient, or can be had, let the public prayers of the church, or some parts of them, be said publicly in the family. Taylor.

The jolly crew, unmindful of the past,
The quarry share, their piteous dinner haste. Dryden's Æneid.

DINNER-TIME. n. f. [dinner and time.] The time of dining.

At dinner-time,
I pray you, have in mind where we must meet. Shakespeare.

Then from the mint walks forth the man of rhyme,
Happy to catch me just at dinner-time. Pope.

DINT. n. f. [dýnt, Saxon.]

1. A blow; a stroke.
Much daunted with that dint her sense was daz'd;
Yet, kindling rage, herself she gather'd round. Spenser.

Neither vainly hope
To be invulnerable in these bright arms,
Though temper'd heav'nly; for that mortal dint,
Save he who reigns above, none can resist. Milton.

2. The mark made by a blow; the cavity remaining after a violent pressure.
He embrac'd her naked body o'er;
And, straining hard the statue, was afraid
His hands had made a dint, and hurt the maid. Dryden.

3. Violence; force; power.
Now you weep; and, I perceive, you feel
The dint of pity. Shakespeare's Julius Cæsar.
We are to wrest the whole Spanish monarchy out of the hands of the enemy; and, in order to it, to work our way into the heart of his country by dint of arms. Addison.

The dewlap'd bull now chafes along the plain,
While burning love ferments in ev'ry vein;
His well-arm'd front against his rival aims,
And by the dint of war his mistress claims. Gay.

To DINT. v. a. [from the noun.] To mark with a cavity by a blow, or violent impression.

With greedy force each other both assail,
And strike so fiercely, that they do impress
Deep-dinted furrows in the batter'd mail:
The iron walls to ward their blows were weak and frail. Fairy Queen.

Leave, leave, fair bride, your solitary bower,
No more shall you return to it alone;
It nuzzeth sadness; and your body's print,
Like to a grave, the yielding down doth dint. Drum.

DIP

Deep-dinted wrinkles on her cheeks she draws;
Sunk are her eyes, and toothless are her jaws. Dryden's Æneid.

DINUMERATION. n. f. [dinumeratio, Lat.] The act of numbering out singly.

DIOCE'SAN. n. f. [from diocesis.] A bishop, as he stands related to his own clergy or flock.

As a diocesan you are like to outdo yourself in all other capacities, and exemplify every word of this discourse. South.

I have heard it has been advised by a diocesan to his inferior clergy, that they should read some of the most celebrated sermons printed by others. Tatler.

DIOCESS. n. f. [diocesis; a Greek word, compounded of dia and cecos.] The circuit of every bishop's jurisdiction; for this realm has two divisions, one into shires or counties, in respect of temporal policy; another into dioceses, in respect of jurisdiction ecclesiastical.

None ought to be admitted by any bishop, but such as have dwelt and remained in his diocesis a convenient time. Whitgift.

He should regard the bishop of Rome as the islanders of Jersey and Guernsey do him of Constance in Normandy; that is, nothing at all;
since by that French bishop's refusal to swear unto our king, those isles were annexed to the diocesis of Winchester. Raleigh's Essays.

St. Paul looks upon Titus as advanced to the dignity of a prince, ruler of the church, and intrusted with a large diocesis, containing many particular cities, under the immediate government of their respective elders, and those deriving authority from his ordination. South.

DIOPTRICAL. } n. f. [dioptricus.] Af-DIOPTRICK. } fording a medium for the sight; assisting the sight in the view of distant objects.

Being excellently well furnished with dioptrical
glasses, he had not been able to see the sun spotted. Boyle.

View the asperities of the moon through a diop-trick glass, and venture at the proportion of her hills by their shadows. Mure.

DIOPTRICKS. n. f. A part of opticks, treating of the different refractions of the light passing through different mediums; as the air, water, glasses, &c. Harris.

DIORTHOSIS. n. f. [διορθωσις, of διορθω, to make straight.] A surgical operation, by which crooked or distorted members are restored to their primitive and regular shape. Harris.

To DIP. v. a. pret. dipped; part. dipped, or dipt. [dippao, Sax.; doopen, Dut.]

1. To immerge; to put into any liquor.
The person to be baptized may be dipped in water; and such an immersion or dipping ought to be made thrice, according to the canon. Ayliffe's Parergon.

Old Corineus compass'd thrice the crew,
And dipp'd an olive-branch in holy dew,
Which thrice he sprinkled round, and thrice aloud

Invok'd the dead, and then dismiss'd the crowd. Dryden's Æneid.

He turn'd a tyrant in his latter days,
And from the bright meridian where he stood,
Descending, dipp'd his hands in lover's blood. Dryden.

The kindred arts shall in their praise conspire,
One dip the pencil, and one string the lyre. Pope.

Now, on fancy's easy wing convey'd,
The king descended to th' Elysian shade;
There in a dusky vale, where Lethe rolls,
Old Bavius sits to dip poetic souls. Pope's Dunciad.

DIP

So fishes, rising from the main,
Can soar with moisten'd wings on high;
The moisture dried, they sink again,
And dip their wings again to fly. Swift.

2. To moisten; to wet.
And though not mortal, yet a cold shudd'ring
dew

Dips me all o'er, as when the wrath of Jove Speaks thunder. Milnes.

3. To be engaged in any affair.
When men are once dip'd, what with the encouragements of sense, custom, facility, and shame of departing from what they have given themselves up to, they go on till they are dified. L'Estrange.

In Richard's time, I doubt, he was a little dip'd in the rebellion of the commons. Dryden.

4. To engage as a pledge: generally used for the first mortgage.

Be careful still of the main chance, my son;
Put out the principal in trusty hands,
Live on the use, and never dip thy lands. Dryden's Persius.

To DIP. v. n.

1. To sink; to immerge.
We have snakes in our cups, and in our dishes;
and whoever dips too deep will find death in the pot. L'Estrange.

2. To enter; to pierce.
The vulture dipping in Prometheus' side,
His bloody beak with his torn liver dyed. Granville.

3. To enter slightly into any thing.
When I think all the repetitions are struck out in a copy, I sometimes find more upon dipping in the first volume. Pope.

4. To take that which comes first; to choose by chance.

With what ill thoughts of Jove art thou possess'd?

Wouldst thou prefer him to some man? Suppose

I dipp'd among the worst, and Scirius chose? Dryden's Persius.

DIPCHICK. n. f. [from dip and chick.] The name of a bird.

Dipchick is so named of his diving and little-ness. Carew.

DIPETALOUS. adj. [δις and πτελον.] Having two flower leaves.

DIPHTHONG. n. f. [διφθονγ.] A coalition of two vowels to form one sound:
as, vain, leave, Caesar.

We see how many disputes the simple and ambiguous nature of vowels created among grammarians, and how it has begot the mistake concerning diphthongs: all that are properly so are syllables, and not diphthongs, as is intended to be signified by that word. Holder.

Make a diphthong of the second eta and iota, instead of their being two syllables, and the objection is gone. Pope.

DIPLOE. n. f. The inner plate or la-mina of the skull.

DIPLOMA. n. f. [διπλωμα.] A letter or writing conferring some privilege; so called, because they used formerly to be written on waxed tables, and folded together.

DIPPER. n. f. [from dip.] One that dips in the water.

DIPPING Needle. n. f. A device which shows a particular property of the mag-netick needle, so that, besides its pola-rity or verticity, which is its direction of altitude, or height above the horizon, when duly pass'd about an horizontal axis, it will always point to a determined degree of altitude, or elevation above the horizon, in this or that place respectively. Phillips.

DIPSA. n. f. [Latin, from ψῆς, to thirst.]

A serpent, whose bite produces the sensation of unquenchable thirst.

Scorpion, and asp, and amphispæna dire,
Cerales horn'd, hydra, and ellops drar,
And dipsa. Milton.

DIPOTE. n. f. [ψῆς, to thirst.] A noun consisting of two cases only. Clark.

DIPTYCH. n. f. [διπtycha, Lat. two leaves folded together.] A register of bishops and martyrs.

The commemoration of saints was made out of the diptychs of the church, as appears by multitudes of places in St. Austin. Saillingfleet.

DIRE. adj. [dirus, Lat.] Dreadful; dismal; mournful; horrible; terrible; evil in a great degree.

Women fight,
To doft their dire distresses. Shakspere.

More by intemperance die
In meats, and drinks, which on the earth shall bring

Diseases dire; of which a monstrous crew
Before thee shall appear. Milton.

Hydras, and gorgons, and chimeras dire. Milton.

Or what the cross dire-looking planet smites,
Or hurtful worm with canker'd venom bites. Milton.

Dire was the tolling, deep the groans, despair
Tended the sick. Milton.

Discord! dire sister of the slaughter'd pow'r,
Small at her birth, but rising ev'ry hour;

While scarce the skies her horrid head can bound,
She stalks on earth, and shakes the world around. Pope.

DIRECT. adj. [directus, Latin.]

1. Straight; not crooked.

2. Not oblique.
The ships would move in one and the same surface; and consequently must needs encounter when they either advance towards one another in direct lines, or meet in the intersection of cross lines. Bentley.

3. [in astronomy.] Appearing to an eye on earth to move progressively through the zodiack; not retrograde.

Two geomantick figures were display'd
Above his beard, a warrior and a maid,
One when direct, and one when retrograde. Dryden's Fables.

4. Not collateral: as, the grandson succeeds his grandfire in a direct line.

5. Apparently tending to some end, as in a straight line.

Such was as then the state of the king, as it was no time by direct means to seek her. And such was the state of his captivated will, as he would delay no time of seeking her. Sidney.

He that does this, will be able to cast off all that is superfluous; he will see what is pertinent, what coherent; what is direct to what slides by, the question. Locke.

6. Open; not ambiguous.

There be, that are in nature faithful and sincere, and plain and direct, not crafty and involved. Baron.

7. Plain; express.

He no where, that I know, says it in direct words. Locke.

To DIRECT. v. a. [dirigo, directum, Latin.]

1. To aim or drive in a straight line.

Two eagles from a mountain's height,
By Jove's command, direct their rapid flight. Pope.

2. To point against, as a mark.

The spear flew hissing thro' the middle space,
And pierc'd his throat, directed at his face. Dryd.

3. To regulate; to adjust.

It is not in man that walketh to direct his steps. Jeremiah.

Wisdom is profitable to direct. Ecclesi.
All that is in a man's power, is to mind what the ideas are that take their turns in his understanding; or else to direct and fort and call in such as he desires. Locke.

4. To prescribe certain measure; to mark out a certain course.

He directeth it under the whole heavens, and his lightning unto the ends of the earth. Job.

5. To order; to command: to direct is a softer term than to command.

DIRECTOR. n. f. [director, Latin.]

1. One that directs; one that prescribes.

2. An instrument that serves to guide any manual operation.

DIRECTION. n. f. [directio, Latin.]

1. Aim at a certain point.
These men's opinions are not the product of judgment, or the consequence of reason; but the effects of chance and hazard, of a mind floating at all adventures, without choice, and without direction. Locke.

The direction of good works to a good end, is the only principle that distinguishes charity. Smith.

2. Tendency of motion impressed by a certain impulse.

No particle of matter, nor any combination of particles, that is, no body, can either move of itself, or of itself alter the direction of its motion. Chyren.

3. Order; command; prescription.

From the counsel that St. Jerome giveth Leta, of taking heed how she read the apocrypha; as also by the help of other learned men's judgments, delivered in like case, we may take direction. Hooker.

Ev'n now
I put myself to thy direction. Shakspere.

The nobles of the people digged it by the direction of the law-giver. Numbers.

Men's passions and God's direction seldom agree. King Charles.

General directions for scholastic disputers is, never to dispute upon mere trifles. Watts.

4. Regularity; adjustment.

All nature is but art unknown to thee;
All chance, direction which thou canst not see. Pope.

DIRECTIVE. adj. [from direct.]

1. Having the power of direction.

A law therefore, generally taken, is a directive rule unto goodness of operation. Hooker.

A power of command there is without all question, though there be some doubt in what faculty this command doth principally reside, whether in the will or the understanding. The true resolution is, that the directive command for counsel is in the understanding; and the applicative command, or empire, for putting in execution of what is directed, is in the will. Bramhall against Hobbes.

On the directive powers of the former, and the regularity of the latter, whereby it is capable of direction, depends the generation of all bodies. Grew.

2. Informing; showing the way.

Nor visited by one directive ray,
From cottage streaming, or from airy hall. Thomson.

DIRECTLY. adv. [from direct.]

1. In a straight line; rectilinearly.

The more a body is nearer to the eyes, and the more directly it is opposed to them, the more it is enlightened; because the light languishes and lessens, the farther it removes from its proper source. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

There was no other place assigned to any of this matter, than that whereunto its own gravity bore it, which was only directly downwards, whereby it obtained that place in the globe, which was just underneath. Woodward.

If the refracted ray be returned directly back to the point of incidence, it shall be refracted by the incident ray. Newton's Opticks.

2. Immediately; apparently; without circumlocution; without any long train of consequence.

Innards, being clean without the church, deny directly, and utterly reject, the very principles of christianity, which hereticks embrace erroneously by misconstruction. Hooker.

No man hath hitherto been so impious, as plainly and directly to condemn prayer. Hooker.

By asserting the scripture to be the canon of our faith, I have unavoidably created to myself enemies in the papists directly, because they have kept the scripture from us what they could. Dryden's Preface to Religio Laici.

His work directly tends to raise sentiments of honour and virtue in his readers. Adisson.

No reason can be assigned, why it is best for the world that God Almighty hath absolute power, which doth not directly prove that no mortal man should have the like. Swift.

DIRECTNESS. n. f. [from direct.] Straightness; tendency to any point; the nearest way.

They argued from celestial causes only, the constant vicinity of the sun, and the directness of his rays; never suspecting that the body of the earth had to great an efficiency in the changes of the air. Bentley.

DIRECTOR. n. f. [director, Latin.]

1. One that has authority over others; a superintendent; one that has the general management of a design or work.

Himself stood director over them, with nodding or stamping, shewing he did like or dislike those things he did not understand. Sidney.

In all affairs thou sole director. Swift.

2. A rule; an ordinance.

Common forms were not design'd Directors to a noble mind. Swift.

3. An instructor; one who shows the proper methods of proceeding.

They are glad to use counsellors and directors in all their dealings of weight, as contracts, testaments. Hooker.

4. One who is consulted in cases of conscience.

I am her director and her guide in spiritual affairs. Dryden.

5. One appointed to transact the affairs of a trading company.

What made directors cheat in south-sea year. Pope.

6. An instrument in surgery, by which the hand is guided in its operation.

The manner of opening with a knife, is by sliding it on a director, the groove of which prevents its being misguided. Sharp's Surgery.

DIRECTORY. n. f. [from director.] The book which the factious preachers published in the rebellion for the direction of their sect in acts of worship.

As to the ordinance concerning the directory, we cannot consent to the taking away of the book of common prayer. Oxford Reasons against the Cov.

DIREFUL. adj. [This word is frequent among the poets, but has been censured as not analogical: all other words compounded with full consisting of a substantive and full: as, dreadful, or full of dread; joyful, or full of joy.]

Dire; dreadful; dismal.

Point of spear it never piercen would,
No dint of direful sword divide the substance could. Fairy Queen.

But yet at last, whereas the direful bend
She saw not fit, off shaking vain alight,
She nigher drew, and saw that joyous end;
Then God the pray'd, and thank'd her faithful knight. Fairy Queen.

Direful hap betide that hated wretch
That makes us wretched by the death of thee.
Shakespeare.

The voice of God himself speaks in the heart of men, whether they understand it or no; and by secret intimations gives the sinner a foretaste of that direful cup, which he is like to drink more deeply of hereafter. South.

I curs'd the direful author of my woes:
'Twas told again, and thence my ruin rose.
Dryden.

Achilles' wrath, to Greeks the direful spring
Of woes unnumber'd, heavenly goddess! sing.
Pope.

DIR'FNESS. n. f. [from dire.] Dismal-ness; horror; hideousness.

Direful, familiar to my slaughterous thoughts, Cannot once flatter me. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

DIR'ECTION. n. f. [directio, Latin.] The act of plundering.

DIRGE. [This is not a contraction of the Latin dirige, in the popish hymn Dirige gressus meos, as some pretend;
but from the Teutonic dyrke, laudare, to praise and extol. Whence it is possible their dyrke, and our dirge, was a laudatory song to commemorate and applaud the dead. Verslegan. Bacon apparently derives it from dirige.] A mournful ditty; a song of lamentation.

The imperial jointress of this warlike state
Have we, as 'twere, with a defeated joy,
With mirth in funeral, and with dirge in marriage,

In equal scale weighing delight and dole,
Taken to wife. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Meanwhile the body of Richard, after many ignominies and reproaches, the diriges and obse-quies of the common people towards tyrants, was obscurely buried. Bacon.

You from above shall hear each day
One dirge dispatch'd unto your clay;
These your own anthems shall become,
Your lasting epicidium. Sandys.

All due measures of her mourning kept,
Did office at the dirge, and by infection wept.
Dryden.

DIR'IGENT. adj. [dirigens, Latin.]

The dirigent line in geometry is that along which the line deferibent is carried, in the generation of any figure. Harris.

DIRK. n. f. [an Erse word.] A kind of dagger used in the Highlands of Scotland.

In vain thy hungry mountaineers
Come forth in all their warlike greers,
The shield, the pistol, dirk, and dagger,
In which they daily wont to swagger. Tickel.

TO DIRKE. v. a. To spoil; to ruin. Obsolete.

Thy waste bigness but cumbers the ground,
And dirkes the beauties of my blossoms round.
Spenser.

DIRT. n. f. [dyrt, Dutch; dirt, Italian-dick.]

1. Mud; filth; mire; any thing that sticks to the clothes or body.

They, gilding dirt in noble verse,
Rustick philosophy rehearse. Denham.

Numbers engage their lives and labours to heap together a little dirt that shall bury them in the end. Wake.

The sea rises as high as ever, though the great heaps of dirt it brings along with it are apt to chook up the shallows. Albion.

Mud by what wretched steps their glory
grows;

From dirt and sea-weed as proud Venice rose:
In each how guilt and greatness equal ran,
And all that rais'd the hero sunk the man.
Pope.

Is yellow dirt the passion of thy life?
Look but on Gripus, or on Gripus' wife. Pope.

2. Meanness; sordidness.

TO DIRT. v. a. [from the noun.] To soul; to bemire; to make filthy; to bedaub; to soil; to pollute; to nasty.

Ill company is like a dug, who dirts those most whom he loves best. Swift.

DIRT-PIE. n. f. [dirt and pie.] Forms moulded by children of clay, in imitation of pastry.

Thou lettest thy heart upon that which has newly left off making of dirt-pies, and is but preparing itself for a green-sickness. Suckling.

DIR'TILY. adv. [from dirty.]

1. Nastily; foully; filthily.

2. Meanly; sordidly; shamefully.

Such gold as that wherewithal
Chimiques from each mineral
Are dirtilly and desperately gull'd. Downe.

1. Nastiness; filthiness; foulness.

2. Meanness; baseness; sordidness.

DIR'TY. adj. [from dirty.]

1. Foul; nasty; filthy.

Thy Dol and Helen of thy noble thoughts
Is in base durance, and contagious prison,
Haul'd thither by mechanic, dirty hand. Shaksp.

2. Sullied; cloudy; not elegant.

Pound an almond, and the clear white colour will be altered into a dirty one, and the sweet taste into an oily one. Locke.

3. Mean; base; despicable.

Such employments are the diseases of labour, and the rust of time, which it contracts not by lying still, but by dirty employment. Taylor.

Marriages would be made up upon more natural motives than meer dirty interests, and increase of riches without measure or end. Temple.

They come at length to grow fots and epucures, mean in their discourses, and dirty in their practices. South.

TO DIRTY. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To foul; to soil.

The lords Strutt lived generously, and never used to dirty their fingers with pen, ink, and counters. Arbutnot.

2. To disgrace; to scandalize.

DIRUPTION. n. f. [dirupcio, Lat.]

1. The act of bursting, or breaking.

2. The state of bursting, or breaking.

DIS. An inseparable particle used in composition, implying commonly a privative or negative signification of the word to which it is joined: as, to arm, to disarm; to join, to disjoin. It is borrowed from des, used by the French and Spaniards in this sense: as, desfouer, to untie; desferrar, to banish: from the Latin de; as, struo, to build; desruo, to destroy.

DISAB'ILITY. n. f. [from disable.]

1. Want of power to do any thing; weakness; impotence.

Our consideration of creatures, and attention unto scriptures, are not in themselves things of like disability to breed or beget faith. Hobbs.

Many withdrew themselves out of pure faintness, and disability to attend the conclusion.
Raleigh.

He that knows most of himself, knows least of his knowledge, and the exercised understanding is conscious of its disability. Glanville.

The ability of mankind does not lie in the impotency or disabilities of brutes. Locke.

2. Want of proper qualifications for any purpose; legal impediment.

A suit is commenced in a temporal court for an inheritance; and the defendant pleads, in disability, that the plaintiff is a ballard.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

This disadvantage, which the dissenters at present lie under, of a disability to receive church preferments, will be easily remedied by the repeal of the test. Swift.

TO DISA'BLE. v. a. [dis and able.]

1. To deprive of force; to weaken; to disqualify for any act.

The invasion and rebellion did not only dis- able this king to be a conqueror, but deprived him both of his kingdom and life. Davies.

Nor so it overcome

Satan, whose fall from heaven, a deadlier bruise
Disabled not to give thee thy death's wound.
Milnes.

A christian's life is a perpetual exercise, a wrestling and warfare, for which sensual pleasure disables him, by yielding to that enemy, with whom he must strive. Taylor's Holy Living.

2. To hinder from action: used of things.

I have known a great fleet disabled for two months, and thereby lose great occasions by an indisposition of the admiral. Temple.

3. To impair; to diminish.

I have disabled mine estate,
By shewing something a more swelling port
Than my faint means would grant continuance.
Shakespeare.

4. To deprive of usefulness or efficacy.

Farewel, Monsieur Traveller; look you list, and wear strange suits; disable all the benefits of your own country. Shakespeare.

Your days I will alarm, I'll haunt your nights,
And worse than age disable your delights. Dryd.

5. To exclude, as wanting proper qualifications.

I will not disable any for proving a scholar, nor yet disemble that I have seen many happily forced upon the course to which by nature they seemed much indisposed. Watson.

TO DISABU'ER. v. a. [dis and abuse.]

To set free from a mistake; to disentangle from a fallacy; to set right; to undeceive.

The imposture and fallacy of our senses impose not only on common heads, but even more refined merceries, who have the advantages of an improved reason to disabuse you. Glanville.

Those teeth fair Lyce must not show,
If she would bite: her lovers, though

Like birds they swoop at seeming grapes,
Are disabus'd when first the grapes. Waller.

If by simplicity you meant a general defect in those that profess angling, I hope to disabuse you.

Walton's Angler.

Chaos of thought and passion, all confus'd;
Still by himself abus'd or disabus'd. Pope.

DISACCOMMODA'TION. n. f. [dis and ac- commodation.] The state of being unfit or unprepared.

Devaluations have happened in some places more than in others, according to the accommodation or disaccommodation of them to such calamities. Hale's Origin of Montend.

TO DISACCU'STOM. v. a. [dis and accus- tom.] To destroy the force of habit by disuse or contrary practice.

TO DISACKNO'WLEDGE. v. a. [dis and acknowledge.] Not to acknowledge.

The manner of denying Christ's deity here prohibited, was, by words and oral expression, verbally to deny and disacknowledge it. South.

DISACQUAINTANCE. n. f. [dis and acquaintance.] Disuse of familiarity.

Confidence, by a long neglect of, and disacquaintance with itself, contracts an inveterate rust or foul. South.

DISADVANTAGE. n. f. [dis and advantage.]

1. Loss; injury to interest: as, he sold to disadvantage.

2. Diminution of any thing desirable, as credit, fame, honour.

Chaucer in many things resembled Ovid, and that with no disadvantage on the side of the modern author. Dryden.

The most shining merit goes down to posterity with disadvantage, when it is not placed by writers in its proper light. Addison.

Those parts already published give reason to think, that the third will appear with no disadvantage to that immortal poem. Addison.

Their testimony will not be of much weight to its disadvantage, since they are liable to the common objection of condemning what they did not understand. Swift.

3. A state not prepared for defence.

No fort can be so strong,
No fleshly breast can armed be so sound,
But will at last be won with batt'ry long,
Or unawares at disadvantage found. Fairy Queen.

To DISADVANTAGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To injure in interest of any kind.

All other violences are so far from advancing christianity, that they extremely weaken and disadvantage it. Decay of Piety.

DISADVANTAGEABLE. adj. [from disadvantage.] Contrary to profit; producing loss. Not used.

In clearing of a man's estate, he may as well hurt himself in being too sudden, as in letting it run on too long; for hasty selling is commonly as disadvantageable as interest. Bacon.

DISADVANTAGEOUS. adj. [from disadvantage.] Contrary to interest; contrary to convenience; unfavourable.

A multitude of eyes will narrowly inspect every part of an eminent man, consider him nicely in all views, and not be a little pleased when they have taken him in the worst and most disadvantageous lights. Addison.

DISADVANTAGEOUSLY. adv. [from disadvantageous.] In a manner contrary to interest or profit; in a manner not favourable.

An approving nod or smile serves to drive you on, and make you display yourselves more disadvantageously. Gov. of the Tongue.

DISADVANTAGEOUSNESS. n. f. [from disadvantageous.] Contrariety to profit; inconvenience; mischief; loss.

DISADVANTUROUS. adj. [dis and adventurous.] Unhappy; unprosperous.

Now he hath left you here,
To be the record of his rueful loss,
And of my doleful disadvanturous death. F. Qu.

To DISAFFECT. v. a. [dis and affect.] To fill with discontent; to discontent; to make less faithful or zealous.

They had attempted to disaffect and discontent his majesty's late army. Clarendon.

DISAFFECTED. part. adj. [from disaffect.] Not disposed to zeal or affection. Usually applied to those who are enemies to the government.

By denying civil worship to the emperor's statues, which the custom then was to give, they were proceeded against as disaffected to the emperor. Stillingfleet.

DISAFFECTEDLY. adv. [from disaffected.] After a disaffected manner.

DISAFFECTEDNESS. n. f. [from disaffected.] The quality of being disaffected.

DISAFFECTION. n. f. [from disaffect.]

1. Dislike; ill-will.

In making laws, princes must have regard to the public dispositions, to the affections and disaffections of the people; and must not introduce a law with public scandal and displeasure. Taylor's Rule of Holy Living.

2. Want of zeal for the government; want of ardour for the reigning prince.

In this age, every thing disliked by those who think with the majority, is called disaffection. Swift.

3. Disorder; bad constitution: in a physical sense.

The disease took its original merely from the disaffection of the part, and not from the peccancy of the humours. Wistman.

DISAFFIRMANCE. n. f. [dis and affirm.] Confutation; negation.

That kind of reasoning which reduceth the opposite conclusion to something that is apparently absurd, is a demonstration in disaffirmance of any thing that is affirmed. Hale.

To DISAFFOREST. v. a. [dis and forest.]

To throw open to common purposes; to reduce from the privileges of a forest to the state of common ground.

The commissioners of the treasury moved the king to disafforest some forests of his, explaining themselves of such forests as lay out of the way, not near any of the king's houses. Bacon.

How happy 's he, which hath due place assigned

To his beasts; and disafforested his mind! Dante.

To DISAGREE. v. n. [dis and agree.]

1. To differ; not to be the same.

The mind clearly and infallibly perceives all distinct ideas to disagree; that is, the one not to be the other. Locke.

2. To differ; not to be of the same opinion.

Why both the hands in worship disagree,
And some adore the flow'rs, and some the tree. Dryden.

3. To be in a state of opposition: followed by from or with, before the opposite.

It containeth many improprieties, disagreeing almost in all things from the true and proper description. Brown.

Strange it is, that they reject the plainest sense of scripture, because it seems to disagree with what they call reason. Atterbury.

DISAGREEABLE. adj. [from disagree.]

1. Contrary; unsuitable.

Some demon, an enemy to the Greeks, had forced her to a conduct disagreeable to her sincerity. Broom.

2. Unpleasant; offensive.

To make the sense of esteem or disgrace sink the deeper, and be of the more weight, either agreeable or disagreeable things should constantly accompany these different states. Locke.

DISAGREEABLENESS. n. f. [from disagreeable.]

1. Unsuitableness; contrariety.

2. Unpleasantness; offensiveness.

A father will hug and embrace his beloved son, for all the dirt and foulness of his cloaths; the clearest of the person easily apologizing for the disagreeableness of the habit. South.

DISAGREEMENT. n. f. [from disagree.]

1. Difference; dissimilitude; diversity; not identity; not likeness.

These carry such plain and evident notes and characters, either of disagreement or affinity with one another, that the several kinds of them are easily distinguished. Woodward.

2. Difference of opinion; contrariety of sentiments.

They seemed one to cross another, as touching their several opinions about the necessity of sacraments, whereas in truth their disagreement is not great. Hooker.

To DISALLOW. v. a. [dis and allow.]

1. To deny authority to any.

When, said he,
Were those first councils disallow'd by me?
Or where did I at sure transition strike,
Provided still it were apostolic? Dryden.

2. To consider as unlawful; not to permit.

Their usual kind of disputing sheweth, that they do not disallow only these Romish ceremonies which are unprofitable, but count all unprofitable which are Romish. Hooker.

3. To censure by some posterior act.

It was known that the most eminent of those who professed his own principles, publicly disallowed his proceedings. Swift.

4. To censure; not to justify.

There is a secret, inward foreboding fear, that some evil or other will follow the doing of that which a man's own conscience disallows him in. South.

To DISALLOW. v. n. To refuse permission; not to grant; not to make or suppose lawful.

God doth in converts, being married, allow continuance with infidels, and yet disallow that the faithful, when they are free, should enter into bonds of wedlock with such. Hooker.

DISALLOWABLE. adj. [from disallow.] Not allowable; not to be suffered.

DISALLOWANCE. n. f. [from disallow.] Prohibition.

God accepts of a thing suitable for him to receive, and for us to give, where he does not declare his refusal and disallowance of it. South.

To DISANCHOR. v. a. [from dis and anchor.] To drive a ship from its anchor.

To DISANIMATE. v. a. [dis and animate.]

1. To deprive of life.

2. To discourage; to deject; to depress.

The presence of a king engenders love amongst his subjects and his loyal friends, as it disanimates his enemies. Shakespeare.

He was confounded and disanimated at his presence, and added, How can the servant of my lord talk with my lord? Boyle.

DISANIMATION. n. f. [from disanimate.]

Privation of life.

They cannot in reason retain that apprehension after death, as being affections which depend on life, and depart upon disanimation. Brown.

To DISANNUAL. v. a. [dis and annual.]

This word is formed, contrarily to analogy, by those who, not knowing the meaning of the word annual, intended to form a negative sense by the needless use of the negative particle. It ought therefore to be rejected, as ungrammatical and barbarous. To annul; to deprive of authority; to vacate; to make null; to make void; to nullify.

The Jews ordinances for us to resume, were to check our Lord himself, which hath disannulled them. Hooker.

That gave him power of disannulling of laws, and disposing of men's fortunes and estates, and the like points of absolute power, being in themselves harsh and odious. Bacon.

To be in both worlds full,
It more than God was, who was hungry here:
Wouldst thou his laws of fasting disannul? Herbert.

Wilt thou my judgments disannul? Defame
My equal rule, to clear thyself of blame? Sandys.

DISANNULMENT. n. f. [from disannul.]
The act of making void.

TO DISAPPEAR. v. n. [disparoitre, Fr.]
To be lost to view; to vanish out of sight; to fly; to go away.

She disappear'd, and left me dark! I wak'd
To find her, or for ever to deplore. Milton.

When the night and winter disappear,
The purple morning, rising with the year,
Salutes the spring. Dryden.

The pictures drawn in our minds are laid in fading colours, and, if not sometimes refreshed, vanish and disappear. Locke.

Criticks I saw that others names deface,
And fix their own with labour in their place;
Their own, like others, soon their place resign'd,
Or disappear'd, and left the first behind. Pope.

TO DISAPPOINT. v. a. [dis and appoint.]

1. To defeat of expectation; to balk; to hinder from something expected.

The Superior Being can defeat all his designs, and disappoint all his hopes. Tillotson.

Whilst the champion, with redoubled might,
Strikes home the jav'lin, his retiring foe Sinks from the wound, and disappoints the blow. Addison.

There's nothing like surprising the rogues:
how will they be disappointed, when they hear that thou hast prevented their revenge! Arbuth.

We are not only tortured by the reproaches which are offered us, but are disappointed by the silence of men when it is unexpected, and humbled even by their praises. Addison.

2. It has of before the thing lost by disappointment.

The Janizaries, disappointed by the loss of the spoil, received of Solyman a great largess. Knutles.

DISAPPOINTMENT. n. f. [from disap-point.] Defeat of hopes; miscarriage of expectations.

It is impossible for us to know what are calamities, and what are blessings. How many accidents have pass'd for misfortunes, which have turned to the welfare and prosperity of the persons in whose lot they have fallen! How many disappointments have, in their consequences, saved a man from ruin! Spectator.

If we hope for things, of which we have not thoroughly considered the value, our disappointment will be greater than our pleasure in the fruition of them. Addison.

DISAPPROBATION. n. f. [dis and approbation.] Censure; condemnation; expression of dislike.

He was obliged to publish his letters, to shew his disapprobation of the publishing of others. Pope.

TO DISAPPROVE. v. a. [disapprover,
French.]

1. To dislike; to censure.

I reason'd much, alas! but more I lov'd;
Sent and recall'd, ordain'd and disapprov'd. Prior.

Without good breeding truth is disapprov'd;
That only makes superior sense belov'd. Pope.

2. To reject as disliked; not to confirm by concurrence.

A project for a treaty of barrier with the States was transmitted thither from Holland, and was disapproved of by our courts. Swift.

DISARD. n. f. [dis, ard, Saxon, a fool, Skinner; discur, French, Junius.]
A prattler; a boasting talker. This word is inserted both by Skinner and Junius; but I do not remember it.

TO DISARM. v. a. [disarmer, French.]

1. To spoil or divest of arms; to deprive of arms.

An order was made by both houses, for disarming all the papists in England. Lawson.

I am still the same,
By different ways still moving to one fame;
And by disarming you I now do more
To save the town, than arming you before. Dryden.

2. It has of before the arms taken away.
They would be immediately disarmed of their great magazine of artillery. Locke.

TO DISARRAY. v. a. [dis and array.]
To undress any one; to divest of clothes.

So, as the bad, the witch they disarray'd.
Fairy Queen.
Now night is come, now soon her disarray,
And in her bed her lay. Spenser.

DISARRAY. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Disorder; confusion; loss of the regular order of battle.

He returned towards the river, to prevent such danger as the disarray, occasioned by the narrowness of the bridge, might cast upon them. Hayward.

Disarray and shameful rout ensue,
And lucre is added to the fainting crew. Dryden.

2. Undress.

DISASSIDUITY. n. f. Absence of care or attention.

The Cecilians kept him back; as very well knowing that, upon every little absence or disassiduity, he should be subject to take cold at his back. Wotton.

DISASTER. n. f. [disastre, Fr.]

1. The blast or stroke of an unfavourable planet.

Stars shone with trains of fire, dews of blood
fall;
Disasters veil'd the sun; and the moist star,
Upon whose influence Neptune's empire stands,
Was sick almost to doomsday with eclipse. Shakespeare.

2. Misfortune; grief; mishap; misery;
calamity.

This day black omens threat the brightest fair
That e'er deserv'd a watchful spirit's care;
Some dire disaster, or by force or flight;
But what, or where, the fates have wrapt in night. Pope.

TO DISASTER. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To blast by the stroke of an unfavourable star.

Ah, chaste bed of mine, said she, which never heretofore couldst accuse me of one defiled thought, how canst thou now receive that dis-aster'd changeling. Sidney.

2. To afflict; to mischief.

These are the holes where eyes should be,
which pitifully disaster the cheeks. Shakespeare.
In his own fields, the swain Disaster'd stands. Thomson.

DISASTROUS. adj. [from disaster.]

1. Unlucky; not fortunate.

That seemeth a most disastrous day to the Scots, not only in regard of this overthrow, but for that upon the same day they were defeated by the English at Floddenfield. Hayward.

2. Gloomy; threatening misfortune.

The moon,
In dim eclipse, disastrous twilight sheds
On half the nations. Milton.

3. Unhappy; calamitous; miserable; struck with affliction.

Then Juno, plying her disastrous fate,
Sends Lis down, her pangs to mitigate. Denham.

Immediately after his return from this very expedition, such disastrous calamities befel his family, that he burnt two of his children himself. Smith.

Fly the pursuit of my disastrous love;
From my unhappy neighbourhood remove. Dryden.

DISASTROUSLY. adv. [from disastrous.]
In a dismal manner.

DISASTROUSNESS. n. f. [from disastrous.] Unluckiness; unfortunate. Dis.

TO DISAVOUE. v. a. [dis and avouch.]
To retract profession; to disown.

Thereupon they flatly disavouch
To yield him more obedience or support. Daniel.

TO DISAVOW. v. a. [dis and avow.] To disown; to deny knowledge of; to deny concurrence in any thing, or with any person.

The heirs and posterity of them which yielded the same, are either ignorant thereof, or do wilfully deny, or stedfastly disavow it. Spenser.

The English did believe his name was therein abused; which he manifested to be true, by dis-avowing it openly afterwards. Hayward.

To deal in person is good, when a man's face breedeth regard, and generally when a man will reserve to himself liberty either to disavow or to expound. Bacon.

A man that acts below his rank, doth but disavow fortune, and seemeth to be conscious of his own want in words, and doth but teach others to envy him. Bacon.

He only does his conquest disavow,
And thinks too little what they found too much. Dryden.

We are reminded by the ceremony of taking an oath, that it is a part of that obedience which we learn from the gospel, expressly to disavow
all evasions and mental reservations whatsoever. Addison's Freeholder.

DISAVOWAL. n. f. [from disavow.]

Denial.

An earnest disavowal of fear often proceeds from fear. Clarissa.

DISAVOWMENT. n. f. [from disavow.]

Denial.

As touching the Tridentine history, his holiness will not press you to any *disavow-

TO DISAUTHORIZE. v. a. [dis and authorize.] To deprive of credit or authority.

The obtrusion of such particular instances as these, are insufficient to disauthorize a note grounded upon the final intimation of nature. Wotton.

TO DISBAND. v. a. [dis and band.]

1. To dismiss from military service; to break up an army; to dismiss soldiers from their colours.

Now Betty from her mother's bed had flown,
And softly stole to discompose her own. Swift.

3. To disturb the temper; to agitate by perturbation.

No more, dear mother: ill in death it shows,
Your peace of mind by rage to discompose. Dryd.

4. To offend; to fret; to vex.

Men, who possess all the advantages of life, are in a state where there are many accidents to disorder and discompose, but few to please them. Swift.

5. To displace; to discard. Not in use.

Though he was a dark prince, and infinitely suspicious, he never put down or discomposed a councillor or near servant. Bacon.

DISCOMPOSURE. n. f. [from discompose.] Disorder; perturbation.

He threw himself upon his bed, lamenting with much passion, and with abundance of tears; and continued in this melancholick discomposure of mind many days. Clarendon.

To DISCONCERT. v. a. [dis and concert.]

1. To unsettle the mind; to discompose.

You need not provoke their spirits by outrages: a careless gesture, a word, or a look, is enough to disconcert them. Collier.

2. To break a scheme; to defeat a machination.

DISCONFORMITY. n. f. [dis and conformity.] Want of agreement; inconsistency.

Lies arise from error and mistake, or malice and tergery; they consist in the disagreement and disconformity betwixt the speech and the conception of the mind, or the conception of the mind and the things themselves, or the speech and the things. Haleswell on Providence.

DISCONGRUITY. n. f. [dis and congruity.] Disagreement; inconsistency.

There is want of capacity in the thing, to sustain such a duration, from the intricate discongruity of the one to the other. Hale.

DISCONSOLATE. adj. [dis and console.] Void of comfort; hopeless; sorrowful; melancholy.

See Cassius all disconsolate,
With Pindarus his bondman, on this hill. Shaksp.

If patiently thy bidding they obey, Dismiss them not disconsolate. Milton.

The ladies and the knights, no shelter nigh,
Were dropping wet, disconsolate and war,
And through their thin array receiv'd the rain. Dryden.

The moon reflects the sunbeams to us; and so, by illuminating the air, takes away in some measure the disconsolate darkness of our winter nights. Ray.

DISCONSOLATELY. adv. [from disconsolate.] In a disconsolate manner; comfortlessly.

DISCONSOLATENESS. n. f. [from disconsolate.] The state of being disconsolate.

DISCONTENT. n. f. [dis and content.] Want of content; uneasiness at the present state.

I see your brows full of discontent,
Your hearts of sorrows, and your eyes of tears. Shakespeare.

Not that their pleasures could'st her discontent.
She sigh'd, not that they stay'd, but that she went. Pope.

DISCONTENT. adj. [dis and content.] Uneasy at the present state; dissatisfied.

They were of their own nature circumspect and slow, discontented and discontent; and those the earl bagged as fittest for his purpose. Heyward.

To DISCONTENT. v. a. [from the noun.] To dissatisfy; to make uneasy at the present state.

I know a discontented gentleman,
Whose humble means match not his haughty spirit. Shakespeare.

The discontented now are only they Whose crimes before did your just cause betray. Dryden.

DISCONTENTED. participial adj. [from discontent.] Uneasy; cheerful; malevolent.

Let us know
What will tie up your discontented sword. Shaksp.

These are, beyond comparison, the two greatest evils in this world; a diseased body, and a discontented mind. Tillotson.

The goddess, with a discontented air,
Seems to reject him, tho' she grants his prayer. Pope.

DISCONTENTEDNESS. n. f. [from discontented.] Uneasiness; want of ease; dissatisfaction.

A beautiful bust of Alexander the Great casts up his face to heaven with a noble air of grief, or discontentedness, in his looks. Addison.

DISCONTENTMENT. n. f. [from discontent.] The state of being discontented; uneasiness.

These are the vices that fill them with general discontentment, as though the bosom of that famous church, wherein they live, were more noisome than any dungeon. Hooker.

The politick and artificial nourishing and entertaining of hopes, and carrying men from hopes to hopes, is one of the best antidotes against the poison of discontentment. Bacon.

DISCONTINUANCE. n. f. [from discontinu.]

1. Want of cohesion of parts; want of union of one part with another; disruption.

The fillicides of water, if there be enough to follow, will draw themselves into a small thread, because they will not discontinue; but if there be no remedy, then they cast themselves into round drops, which is the figure that saveth the body most from discontinuance. Bacon.

2. Cessation; intermission.

Let us consider whether our approaches to him are sweet and refreshing, and if we are uneasy under any long discontinuance of our conversation with him. Atterbury.

3. [In the common law.] An interruption or breaking off; as discontinuance of possession, or discontinuance of process.

The effect of discontinuance of possession is, that a man may not enter upon his own land or tenement alienated, whatsoever his right be unto it, or by his own authority; but must seek to recover possession by law. The effect of discontinuance of plea is, that the instance may not be taken up again, but by a new writ to begin the suit afresh. Cowell.

DISCONTINUATION. n. f. [from discontinu.] Disruption of continuity; breach of union of parts; disruption; separation.

Upon any discontinuation of parts, made either by bubbles, or by shaking the glass, the whole mercury falls. Newton.

To DISCONTINUE. v. n. [discontinuer, Fr.]

1. To lose the cohesion of parts; to suffer separation or disruption of substance.

All bodies, ductile and tensile, as metals, that will be drawn into wires; wool and tow, that will be drawn into yarn, or thread; have in them the appetite of not discontinuing strong, which maketh them follow the force that pulleth them out, and yet so as not to discontinue or forsake their own body. Bacon.

2. To lose an established or prescriptive custom or right.

Thyself shalt discontinue from thine heritage that I gave thee, and I will cause thee to serve thine enemies. Jeremiah.

To DISCONTINUE. v. a.

1. To leave off; to cease any practice or habit.

Twenty puny lyes I'll tell,
That men shall swear I've discontinued school.
Above a twelvemonth. Shakespeare.

Examine thy customs of diet, sleep, exercise, apparel, and the like; and try, in any thou shalt judge hurtful, to discontinue it by little and little; but so, as if thou find any inconvenience by the change, thou come back to it again. Bacon.

2. To break off; to interrupt.

There is that property, in all letters, of aptness to be conjoined in syllables and words, through the voluble motions of the organs from one stop or figure to another, that they modify and discriminate the voice, without appearing to discontinue it. Holder's Elements of Speech.

DISCONTINUITY. n. f. [dis and continuity.] Difunity of parts; want of cohesion.

That discontinuity of parts is the principal cause of the opacity of bodies, will appear by considering that opaque substances become transparent by filling their pores with any substance of equal, or almost equal, density with their parts. Newton.

DISCONVENIENCE. n. f. [dis and convenience.] Incongruity; disagreement; opposition of nature.

Fear ariseth many times out of natural antipathies of nature; but, in these disconveniences of nature, deliberation hath no place at all.

Bramhall's Answer to Hobbes.

DISCORD. n. f. [discordia, Latin.]

1. Disagreement; opposition; mutual anger; reciprocal oppugnancy.

See what a scourge is laid upon your hate,
That heav'n finds means to kill your joys with love!

And I, for winking at your discord too,
Have lost a brace of kinsmen. Shakespeare.

He is a false witness that speaketh lies, and that soweth discord among brethren. Proverbs.

2. Difference or contrariety of qualities, particularly of sounds.

Take but degree away, untune that string,
And hark what discord follows; each thing meets
In mere oppugnancy. Shakespeare.

Discord, like that of music's various parts,
Discord that makes the harmony of hearts;
Discord, that only this dispute shall bring,
Who best shall love the duke and serve the king. Dryden.

All nature is but art unknown to thee;
All chance, direction which thou canst not see;
All discord, harmony not understood;
All partial evil, universal good. Pope.

3. [In music.] Sounds not of themselves pleasing, but necessary to be mixed with others.

It is found alone that doth immediately and incorporeally affect most; this is most manifest in music, and concords and discords in music: for all sounds, whether they be sharp or flat, if they be sweet, have a roundness and equality; and if they be harsh, are unequal: for a discord itself is but a harshness of divers sounds meeting. Bacon.

It is the lark that sings so out of tune,
Straining harsh discords and uncaring sharps. Shakespeare.

How doth music amaze us, when of discord she maketh the sweetest harmony! Trachum.

To DISCORD. v. n. [discordo, Latin.] To disagree; not to suit with.

Sounds do disturb and alter the one the other; sometimes the one drowning the other, and making it not heard; sometimes the one jarring and discording with the other, and making a confusion. Bacon.

DISCORDANCE. } n. f. [from discord.]
DISCORDANCY. } Disagreement; opposition; inconsistency.

DISCORDANT. adj. [discordans, Latin.]

1. Inconsistent; at variance with itself.

Myrrha was joy'd the welcome news to hear,
But, clogg'd with guilt, the joy was unsincere;
So various, so discordant is the mind,
That in our will a different will we find. Dryden.

2. Opposite; contrarious.

The discordant attraction of some wandering comets would certainly disorder the revolutions of the planets, if they approached too near them. Cheyne.

3. Incongruous; not conformable.

Hither conscience is to be referred; if by a comparison of things done with the rule there be a consonancy, then follows the sentence of approbation; if discordant from it, the sentence of condemnation. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

DISCORDANTLY. adv. [from discordant.]

1. Inconsistently; in disagreement with itself.

2. In disagreement with another.

Two strings of a musical instrument being struck together, making two noises that arrive at the ear at the same time as to sense, yield a sound differing from either of them, and as it were compounded of both; inasmuch, that if they be discordantly tuned, though each of them struck apart would yield a pleasing sound, yet being struck together they make a harsh and troublesome noise. Boyle.

3. Peevishly; in a contradictory manner.

To DISCOVER. v. a. [découvrir, French; dis and cover.]

1. To show; to disclose; to bring to light; to make visible.

He shall never, by any alteration in me, discover my knowledge of his mistake. Pope's Lett.

7. To detect; to find though concealed.

Up he starts,
Discover'd and surpris'd. Milton.

Man with strength and free will arm'd
Complete, to have discover'd and repuls'd
Whatever wiles of foe or seeming friend. Milton.

8. To find things or places not known before.

Some to discover islands far away. Shaksp.
Another part in squadrons bend their march
On bold adventure, to discover wide
That dismal world. Milton.

So of things. The Germans discover'd printing and gunpowder.

9. To exhibit to the view.

Some high climbing hill,
Which to his eye discovers a tower
The goodly prospect of some foreign land,
First seen, or some renown'd metropolis
With glitt'ring spires and battlements adorn'd. Milton.

Not light, but rather darkness visible,
Sere'd only to discover lights of woe. Milton.

DISCOVERABLE. adj. [from discover.]

1. That may be found out.

That mineral matter, which is so intermixed with the common and terrestrial matter, as not to be discoverable by human industry; or, it discoverable, diffused and scattered amongst the crasser matter, can never be separated. Woodward's Natural History.

Revelation may assert two things to be joined, whose connection or agreement is not discoverable by reason. Watts.

2. Apparent; exposed to view.

They were deceived by Satan, and that not in an invisible situation, but in an open and discoverable apparition, that is, in the form of a serpent. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

It is concluded by astronomers, that the atmosphere of the moon hath no clouds nor rains, but a perpetual and uniform serenity; because nothing discoverable in the lunar surface is ever covered and absconded by the interposition of any clouds or mists. Bentley.

DISCOVERER. n. f. [from discover.]

1. One that finds any thing not known before; a finder out.

It more be found out, they will not recompense the discoverer's pains, but will be fitter to be cast out. Holder.

Places receive appellations, according to the language of the discoverer, from observations made upon the people. Broom.

The Cape of Good Hope was doubled in those early times; and the Portuguese were not the first discoverers of that navigation. Arbuthnot.

An old maiden gentlewoman is the greatest discoverer of judgments; she can tell you what sin it was that set such a man's house on fire. Addison's Spectator.

2. A scout; one who is put to descry the posture or number of an enemy; speculator.

Here stand, my lords, and send discoverers forth,

To know the numbers of our enemies. Shaksp.

DISCOVERY. n. f. [from discover.]

1. The act of finding any thing hidden.

Of all who since have us'd the open sea,
Than the bold English none more fame have won;

Beyond the year, and out of heaven's high way,

They made discoveries where they see no sun. Dryden.

2. The act of revealing or disclosing any secret.

What, must I hold a candle to my shame?
They in themselves, good sooth, are too, too light.

Why 'tis an office of discovery, love,
And I should be obscur'd. Shakespeare.

Things that appeared amiable by the light of this world, appear of a different odious hue in the clear discoveries of the next. South.

It would be necessary to say something of the state to which the war hath reduced us; such a discovery ought to be made as late as possible.

Swift.

To DISCOUNSEL. v. a. [dis and counsel.] To dissuade; to give contrary advice. Obsolete.

But him that palmer from that vanity,
With temperate advice discounsell'd. Spenser.

To DISCRETE. v. a. [discretus, Lat.] To separate; to discontinue.

As for its diaphaneity, it enjoyeth that most eminently; as having its earthly and salinous parts so exactly resolved, that its body is left imporous, and not discreted by atomical terminations. Brown.

DISCRETE. adj. [discretus, Lat.]

1. Distinct; disjointed; not continuous. Discrete quantity, or different individuals, are measured by number, without any breaking continuity; that is, in things that have continuity, as continued quantity and motion. Hale.

2. Disjunctive; as, I resign my life, but not my honour, is a discrete proposition.

3. Discrete Proportion is when the ratio between two pairs of numbers or quantities is the same; but there is not the same proportion between all the four: thus, 6 : 8 :: 3 : 4. Harris.

DISCRETION. n. f. [from discretio, Lat.]

1. Prudence; knowledge to govern or direct one's self; skill; wise management.

Nothing then was further thought upon for the manner of governing; but all permitted unto their wisdom and discretion which were to rule. Hooker.

A knife may be taken away from a child, without depriving them of the benefits thereof which have years and discretion to use it. Hooker.

It is not good that children should know any wickedness: old folks have discretion, and know the world. Shakspeare.

All this was order'd by the good discretion Of the right reverend cardinal of York. Shakspeare.
The pleasure of commanding our passions is to be preferred before any sensual pleasure; because it is the pleasure of wisdom and discretion. Tillotson.

But care in poetry must still be had;
It alas discretion ev'n in running mad. Pope.

There is no talent to useful towards rising in the world, or which puts men more out of the reach of fortune, than discretion, a species of lower prudence. Swift.

2. Liberty of acting at pleasure; uncontrolled and unconditional power: as, he surrenders at discretion; that is, without stipulation.

DISCRETIONARY. adj. [from discretion.] Left at large; unlimited; unrestrained.

TO DISDAIN. v. a. [dédaigner, Fr.]

To scorn; to consider as unworthy of one's character.

There is nothing so great, which I will fear to do for you; nor nothing so small, which I will disdain to do for you. Sidney.

They do disdain as much beyond our thoughts, Which makes me sweat with wrath. Shakspeare.

What safe and nicely I might well delay
By rule of knighthood, I disdain and spurn. Shakspeare.

Tell him, Cato
Disdains a life which he has power to offer. Addison.

DISDAIN. n. f. [sdegno, Ital.] Contempt; scorn; contemptuous anger; indignation.

Children being haughty, through disdain and want of nurture, do stain the nobility of their kindred. Eccles.

But against you, ye Greeks, ye coward train, Gods! how my soul is mov'd with just disdain! Pope's Odyssey.

DISDAINFUL. adj. [disdain and full.] Contemptuous; haughtily scornful; indignant.

There will come a time when three words, uttered with charity and meekness, shall receive a far more blessed reward, than three thousand volumes, written with disdainful sharpness of wit. Hooker.

The queen is obstinate,
Stubborn to justice, apt to accuse it,
Disdainful to be tried by it. Shakspeare.

Seek through this grove;
A sweet Athenian lady is in love
With a disdainful youth: anoint his eyes;
But do it when the next thing he espies
Shall be the lady. Shakspeare.

But those I can accuse, I can forgive:
By my disdainful silence let them live. Dryden.
The disdainful soul came rushing through the wound. Dryden.

DISDAINFULLY. adv. [from disdainful.] Contemptuously; with haughty scorn; with indignation.

Ignominy.

DISGRA'CE. n. f. [from disgrace.] One that exposes to shame; one that causes
ignominy.

I have given good advice to those infamous disgracers of the sex and calling. Swift.

DISGRA'CIOUS. adj. [dis and gracious.]
Unpleasing.

I do suspect I have done some offence,
That seems disgracious in the city's eye. Shaksp.

TO DISGUISE. v. a. [deguiser, Fr. dis and guise.]

1. To conceal by an unusual dress.
How might we disguise him?
—Alas! I know not: there is no woman's gown big enough for him. Shakespeare.
Disguis'd he came; but those his children
dear
Their parent soon discern'd through his disguise. Milton.

2. To hide by a counterfeit appearance; to cloak by a false show: as, he dis-
guis'd his anger.

3. To disfigure; to change the form.
They saw the faces, which too well they knew,
Though then disguis'd in death, and smear'd all o'er
With filth obscene, and dropping putrid gore. Dryden.

More duteous at her call,
Than at Circean call the herd disguis'd. Milton.
Ulysses wakes, not knowing the place where he was; because Minerva made all things appear in a disguis'd view. Pope.

4. To deform by liquor: a low term.
I have just left the right worshipful, and his myrmidons, about a sneaker of five gallons; the whole magistracy was pretty well disguis'd before I gave them the flip. Spectator.

DISGUISE. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A dress contrived to conceal the person that wears it.

They generally act in a disguise themselves, and therefore mistake all outward show and appearances for hypocrisy in others. Addison.

Since I in Arcite cannot Arcite find,
The world may search in vain with all their eyes,
But never penetrate through this disguise. Dryd.

2. A false appearance; counterfeit show.

Hence guilty joys, disguises, surmises,
False oaths, false tears, deccits, disguises. Pope.

3. Disorder by drink.
You see we've burnt our cheeks; and mine own tongue
Splits what it speaks: the wild disguise hath almost

Antickt us. Shakespeare.

DISGUISEMENT. n. f. [from disguise.]
Dress of concealment.

Under that disguisement I should find opportunity to reveal myself to the owner of my heart. Sidney.

The marquis thought best to disguise his beard, and told him; that he was going covertly to take a secret view of the forwardness of his majesty's fleet: this did somewhat handsomely bear the disguisement. Warton.

DISGUISE. n. f. [from disguise.]

1. One that puts on a disguise.
I hope he is grown more disengaged from his interests on his own affairs, which is quite the reverse to you, unless you are a very dexterous dis- guiser. Swift.

2. One that conceals another by a disguise; one that disfigures.
Death's a great disguiser. Shakespeare.

DISGUST. n. f. [degout, French.]

1. Aversion of the palate from any thing.
2. Ill humour; malevolence; offence conceived.

The manner of doing is of more consequence than the thing done, and upon that depends the satisfaction or disgust wherewith it is received. Locke.

Thence dark disgust and hatred, winding wiles,
Coward deceit, and ruffian violence. Thomson.

TO DISGUST. v. a. [degouter, French;
degusto, Latin.]

1. To raise aversion in the stomach; to distaste.

2. To strike with dislike; to offend. It is variously constructed with at or with.
If a man were disgusted at marriage, he would never recommend it to his friend. Atterbury.
Those unenlarged souls are disgusted with the wonders which the microscope has discovered. Watts.

3. To produce aversion: with from.
What disgusts me from having to do with answer jobbers, is, that they have no conscience. Swift.

DISGUSTFUL. adj. [disgust and full.]
Nauseous; that causes aversion.

I have finished the most disgustful task that ever I undertook. Swift.

DISH. n. f. [byrc, Saxon; dyse, Erse;
discus, Latin.]

1. A broad wide vessel, in which food is served up at the table.

Of these he murders one; he boils the flesh,
And lays the mangled morsels in a dish. Dryd.
I saw among the ruins an old heathen altar, with this particularity in it, that it is hollowed like a dish at one end; but it was not this end on which the sacrifice was laid. Addison.

2. A deep hollow vessel for liquid food.

Who would rob a hermit of his weeds,
His few books, or his beads, or maple dish?
Or do his grey hairs any violence? Milton.
A ladle for our silver dish
Is what I want, is what I wish. Prior.

3. The meat served in a dish; any particular kind of food.

I have here a dish of doves, that I would bestow upon your worship. Shakespeare.

Let's kill him boldly, but not wrathfully;
Let's carve him as a dish fit for the gods,
Not hew him as a carcass fit for hounds. Shakespeare's Julius Cæsar.

The contract you pretend with that base wretch,
One tired of aims and foster'd with cold dishes,
With scraps o' th' court; it is no contract, none.

Shakespeare.

'Tis not the meat, but 'tis the appetite,
Makes eating a delight;
And if I like one dish
More than another, that a pheasant is. Suckling.
The earth would have been deprived of a most excellent and wholesome fare, and very many delicious dishes that we have the use and benefit of.

Woodward.

Many people would, with reason, prefer the gripping of an hungry belly, to those dishes which are a feast to others.

Locke.

4. A kind of measure among the tanners.

They measure block-tin by the dish, which containeth a gallon.

Carew.

To DISH. v. a. [from the noun.] To serve in a dish; to send up to table.

For conspiracy,

I know not how it tastes, though it be dish'd
For me to try.

Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

DISH-CLOUT. n. f. [dish and clout.] The cloth with which the maids rub their dishes.

A dish-clout of Jaquenetta's he wears next his heart for a favour.

Send them up to their masters with a dishclout pinned at their tails.

Swift.

DISH-WASHER. n. f. [dish and washer;
mergus.] The name of a bird.

DISHABILLE. adj. [deshabille, Fr.]
Undressed; loosely or negligently dressed.

Queens are not to be too negligently dressed or dishabille.

Dryden's Dufresnoy.

DISHAB'ILLE. n. f. Undress; loose dress.

A woman who would preserve a lover's respect to her person, will be careful of her appearance before him when in dishabille.

Clarissa.

To DISHA'BIT. v. a. [This word I have found only in Shakespeare.] To throw out of place; to drive from their habitation.

But for our approach those sleeping stones,
By the compulsion of their ordinance,
By this time from their fixed beds of lime
Had been dishabited, and wide havock made.

King Lear.

DISHA'RMONY. n. f. [dis and harmony.]
Contrariety to harmony.

To DISHEARTEN. v. a. [dis and hearten.]
To discourage; to deject; to terrify;
to depress.

To dishearten with fearful sentences, as though salvation could hardly be hoped for, is not so consonant with christian charity.

Hooker.

He not disheartened then, nor cloud those looks
That wont to be more cheerful and serene.

Milton.

Yet neither thus dishearten'd nor dismay'd,
The time prepar'd I waited.

Milton.

It is a consideration that might dishearten those who are engaged against the common adversaries, that they promise themselves as much from the folly of enemies, as from the power of their friends.

Scotting's Hist.

Men cannot say, that the greatness of an evil and danger is an encouragement to men to run upon it; and that the greatness of any good and happiness ought in reason to dishearten men from the pursuit of it.

Tillotson.

A true christian fervour is more than the alliances of our potent friends or even the fears of our disheartened enemies.

Atterbury.

DISHE'RISSON. n. f. [dis and herisson.]
The act of debarring from inheritance.

To DISHE'RISSON. v. a. [dis and inherit.]
To cut off from hereditary succession;
to debar from an inheritance.

He tries to restore to their rightful heritage

VOL. I.

such good old English words as have been long time out of use, almost disherited.

Spenser.

Nor how the Dryads and the woodland train
Disherited, ran howling o'er the plain.

Dryden.

To DISHEVEL. v. a. [decheveler, French.]
To spread the hair disorderly; to throw the hair of a woman negligently about her head. It is not often used but in the passive participle.

A gentle lady all alone,

With garments rent and hair dishevelled,
Wringing her hands, and making piteous moan.

Spenser.

After followed great numbers of women weeping, with dishevelled hair, scratching their faces, and tearing themselves, after the manner of the country.

Knotter.

A troop of Trojans mix'd with these appear,
And mourning matrons with dishevel'd hair.

Dryden's Æneid.

The flames, involv'd in smoke,
Of incense, from the sacred altar broke,
Caught her dishevel'd hair and rich attire.

Dryden's Æneid.

You this morn beheld his ardent eyes,
Saw his arm lock'd in her dishevel'd hair.

Smith.

DISHING. adj. [from dish.] Concave:
a cant term among artificers.

For the form of the wheels, fume make them more dishing, as they call it, than others; that is, more concave, by setting off the spokes and felles more outwards.

Mortimer.

DISHONEST. adj. [dis and honest.]

1. Void of probity; void of faith; faithless; wicked; fraudulent.

Justice then was neither blind to discern, nor lame to execute. It was not subject to be imposed upon by a deluded fancy, nor yet to be bribe by a glazing appetite, for an utile or ju-cundum to turn the balance to a false or dishonest sentence.

South.

He lays it down as a principle, that right and wrong, honest and dishonest, are defined only by laws, and not by nature.

Locke.

2. Unchaste; lewd.

To-morrow will we be married.—I do desire it with all my heart; and I hope it is no dishonest desire, to desire to be a woman of the world.

Shakespeare's As you like it.

3. Disgraced; dishonoured.

Dishonest with lopp'd arms the youth appears,
Spoil'd of his nose, and shorten'd of his ears.

Dryden.

4. Disgraceful; ignominious. These two senses are scarcely English, being borrowed from the Latin idiom.

She saw her sons with purple death expire,
Her sacred domes involv'd in rolling fire;
A dreadful series of intestine wars,
Inglorious triumphs, and dishonest scars.

Pope.

DISHONESTLY. adv. [from dishonest.]

1. Without faith; without probity; faith-lessly; wickedly.

I protest he had the chain of me,
Thou' most dishonestly he doth deny it.

Shakespeare.

2. Lewdly; wantonly; unchastely.

A wife daughter should bring an inheritance to her husband; but she that liveth dishonestly is her father's heaviness.

Eccl'astical.

DISHONESTY. n. f. [from dishonest.]

1. Want of probity; faithlessness; violation of trust.

Their fortune depends upon their credit, and a stain of open public dishonesty must be to their disadvantage.

Swift.

2. Unchastity; incontinence; lewdness.

Mrs. Ford, the honest woman, the modest wife, the virtuous creature, that hath the jealous fool for her husband! I suspect without cause, mistress, do I?—Heaven be my witness you do,
if you suspect me in any dishonesty.

Shakespeare.

DISHONOUR. n. f. [dis and honour.]

1. Reproach; disgrace; ignominy.

Let not my jealousies be your dishonours,
But mine own fancies.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

He was pleased to own Lazarus even in the dishonours of the grave, and vouchsafed him, in that despicable condition, the glorious title of his friend.

Boyle's Seraphick Love.

Take him for your husband and your lord;

'Tis no dishonour to confer your grace

On one descended from a royal race.

Dryden.

2. Reproach uttered; censure; report of infamy.

So good, that no tongue could ever
Pronounce dishonour of her; by my life
She never knew harm doing.

Shakespeare.

To DISHONOUR. v. a. [dis and honour.]

1. To disgrace; to bring shame upon; to blast with infamy.

It is no vicious blot, murder, or foulness,
No unchaste action, or dishonour'd step,
That hath depriv'd me of your grace and favour.

Shakespeare.

This no more dishonours you at all,
Than to take in a town with gentle words,

Which else would put you to your fortune.

Shaksp.

A woman that honoureth her husband, shall be judg'd wife of all; but she that dishonoureth him in her pride, shall be counted ungodly of all.

Eccl'astical.

We are not so much to strain ourselves to make those virtues appear in us which really we have not, as to avoid those imperfections which may dishonour us.

Dryden's Dufresnoy.

2. To violate chastity.

3. To treat with indignity.

One glimpse of glory to my issue give,
Grac'd for the little time he has to live:
Dishonour'd by the king of men he stands;
His rightful prize is ravish'd from his hands.

Dryden's Iliad.

DISHONOURABLE. adj. [from dishonour.]

1. Shameful; reproachful; ignominious.

He did dishonourable find

Those articles which did our state decrease.

Daniel.

2. Being in a state of neglect or disci-teem.

He that is honoured in poverty, how much more in riches? and he that is dishonourable in riches, how much more in poverty?

Eccl'astical.

DISHONOURER. n. f. [from dishonour.]

1. One that treats another with indignity.

Preaching how meritorious with the gods
It would be, to enslave an impious
Dishonourer of Dagon.

Milton.

2. A violator of chastity.

To DISHONOUR. v. a. [dis and honour.] To strip of horns.

We'll dishonour the spirit,

And mock him home to Windsor.

Shakespeare.

DISHUMOUR. n. f. [dis and humour.]

Peevishness; ill humour; uneasy state of mind.

Speaking impatiently to servants, or any thing that betrays inattention or dishumour, are also criminal.

Spettator.

DISIMPROVEMENT. n. f. [dis and improvement.] Reduction from a better to a worse state; the contrary to melioration; the contrary to improvement.

The final issue of the matter would be, an utter neglect and disimprovement of the earth.

Norris.

I cannot see how this kingdom is at any height of improvement, while four parts in five of the plantations, for thirty years past, have been real disimprovements.

Swift.

To DISINCARCERATE. v. a. [dis and incarcerate.] To set at liberty; to free from prison.

The arsenical bodies being now coagulated, and kindled into flaming atoms, require dry and warm air, to open the earth for to disincarnate the same venene bodies.

DISINCLINATION. n. f. [from disincline.] Want of affection; slight; dislike; ill-will not heightened to aversion.

Disappointment gave him a disinclination to the fair sex, for whom he does not express all the respect possible.

To DISINCLINE. v. a. [dis and incline.]

To produce dislike to; to make disaffected; to alienate affection from.

They were careful to keep up the fears and apprehensions in the people of dangers and designs, and to disinclinate them from any reverence or affection to the queen, whom they began every day more implacably to hate, and consequently to disoblige.

DISINGENUITY. n. f. [from disingenuous.] Meanness of artifice; unfairness.

They contract a habit of ill-nature and disingenuity necessary to their affairs, and the temper of those upon whom they are to work.

DISINGENUOUS. adj. [dis and ingenuous.] Unfair; meanly artful; vitiously subtle; sly; cunning; illiberal; unbecoming a gentleman; crafty.

'Tis disingenuous to accuse our age of idleness, who all our power engage in the same studies, the same course to hold, Nor think our reason for new arts too old.

It was a disingenuous way of proceeding, to oppose a judgment of charity concerning their church, to a judgment of reason concerning the nature of actions.

There cannot be any thing so disingenuous and misbecoming any rational creature, as not to yield to plain reason, and the conviction of clear arguments.

DISINGENUOUSLY. adv. [from disingenuous.] In a disingenuous manner.

DISINGENUOUSNESS. n. f. [from disingenuous.] Mean subtilty; unfairness; low craft.

I might prefix them with the unreasonableness, the disingenuousness, of embracing a profession to which their own hearts have an inward reluctance.

DISINHÉRISON. n. f. [dis and inherit.] 1. The act of cutting off from any hereditary succession; the act of disinheriting.

If he stood upon his own title of the house of Lancaster, inherent in his person, he knew it was a title condemned by parliament, and generally prejudged, in the common opinion of the realm, that it tended directly to the disinherison of the line of York.

The chief minister of the revenue was obliged to prevent, and even oppose, such disinherison.

2. The state of being cut off from an hereditary right.

In respect of the effects and evil consequences, the adultery of the woman is worse, as bringing badlardy into a family, and disinherison or great injuries to the lawful children.

To DISINHÉRIT. v. a. [dis and inherit.] To cut off from an hereditary right; to deprive of an inheritance.

Is it then just with us to disinherit The unborn nephews for the father's fault?

Unmuffled, ye faint stars; and thou, fair moon,

Stoop thy pale visage through an amber cloud, And disinherit chaos that reigns here In double night of darkness, and of sander. Milton.

Posterity hands curs'd! fair patrimony, That I must leave ye, sons! O were I able To waste it all myself, and leave ye none; So disinherited, how would ye blest

Me, now your curie! Of how fair a portion Adam disinherited his whole posterity by one single prevarication!

To DISINTER. v. a. [from dis and inter.] To unbury; to take as out of the grave.

The philosopher, the saint, or the hero, the wife, the good, or the great man, very often lie hid and concealed in a plebeian, which a proper education might have disinterred.

DISINTERESTED. adj. [dis and interesse, French.] It is written disinterested by those who derive it immediately from interesse, and I think more properly.] Void of regard to private advantage; not biased by particular views; impartial.

Not that tradition's parts are useless here, When general, old, disinterested, and clear.

DISINTERESTMENT. n. f. [dis, and interessement, French.] Disregard to private advantage; disinterest; disinterestedness. This word, like charges in the same sentence, is merely Gallick.

He has managed some of the charges of the kingdom with known ability, and laid them down with entire disinterestedness.

DISINTEREST. n. f. [dis and interesse.]

1. What is contrary to one's wish or prosperity; that which any one is concerned to prevent.

They judge it the great disinterest to Rome.

2. Indifference to profit; superiority to regards of private advantage.

DISINTERESTED. adj. [from disinterest.]

1. Superior to regard of private advantage; not influenced by private profit.

As disinterested as you appear to the world, no man is more in the power of that prevailing favourite passion than yourself.

2. Without any concern in an affair; without fear or hope.

DISINTERESTEDLY. adv. [from disinterested.] In a disinterested manner.

DISINTERESTEDNESS. n. f. [from disinterested.] Contempt of private interest; neglect of personal profit.

These expressions of selfishness and disinterestedness have been used in a very loose and indeterminate manner.

To DISINTRICATE. v. a. [dis and intricate.] To disentangle.

To DISINVITE. v. a. [dis and invite.] To retract an invitation.

To DISJOIN. v. a. [dejoindre, Fr. dis and join.] To separate; to part from each other; to dilunite; to sunder.

Never shall my harp thy praise Forget, nor from thy father's praise disjoin.

Left different degree Disjoin us, and I then too late renounce Deity for thee, when fate will not permit.

Happier for me, that all our hours assign'd Together we had liv'd; ev'n not in death disjoin'd.

Never let us lay down our arms against France, till we have utterly disjoined her from the Spanish monarchy.

To DISJOINT. v. a. [dis and joint.]

1. To put out of joint.

Be all their ligaments at once unbound, And their disjointed bones to powder ground.

Yet what could swords or poison, racks or flame, But mangle and disjoint the brittle frame? More fatal Henry's words; they murder Emma's frame.

2. To break at junctures; to separate at the part where there is a cement.

Mould'ring arches, and disjointed columns.

3. To break in pieces; to dilaniate.

Rotation must disperse in air All things which on the rapid orb appear; And if no power that motion should controul, It must disjoint and dissipate the whole.

Should a barbarous Indian, who had never seen a palace or a ship, view the separate and disjointed parts, he would be able to form but a very lame and dark idea of either of those excellent and useful inventions.

4. To carve a fowl.

5. To make incoherent; to break the relation between the parts.

The constancy of your wit was not wont to bring forth such disjointed speeches.

But now her grief has wrought her into frenzy; The images her troubled fancy forms Are incoherent, wild; her words disjointed.

To DISJOINT. v. n. To fall in pieces.

Let both worlds disjoint, and all things suffer, Ere we will eat our meal in fear.

DISJOINT. participle. [from the verb.] Separated; divided. We now write disjointed.

Young Fontinbras, Holding a weak supposal of our worth, Thinks by our late dear brother's death Our state to be disjoint and out of frame.

DISJUDICATION. n. f. [disjudicatio, Lat.] Judgment; determination; perhaps only mistaken for disjudication.

The disposition of the organ is of great importance in the disjudication we make of colours.

DISJUNCT. adj. [disjunctus, Lat.] Disjoined; separate.

DISJUNCTION. n. f. [from disjunctio, Latin.] Disunion; separation; parting.

You may Enjoy your mistress now, from whom you see There's no disjunction to be made, but by Your ruin.

There is a great analogy between the body natural and politic, in which the ecclesiastical or spiritual part justly supplies the part of the soul; and the violent separation of this from the other, does as certainly infer death and dissolution, as the disjunction of the body and the soul in the natural.

DISJUNCTIVE. adj. [disjunctivus, Lat.]

1. Incapable of union.

Such principles, whose atoms are of that disjunctive nature, as not to be united in a sufficient number to make a visible mass.

2. That marks separation or opposition: as, I love him, or fear him.

There are such words as disjunctive conjunctions.

3. In logic.

A disjunctive proposition is when the parts are opposed to one another by disjunctive particles: as, It is either day or night; The weather is either rainy or sunny; Quantity is either length, breadth, or depth. The truth of disjunctives depends on the necessary and immediate opposition of the parts, therefore only the last of these examples is true; but the two first are not strictly true; because twilight is a medium between day and night; and dry cloudy weather is a medium between shining and raining.

A disjunctive syllogism is when the major proposition is disjunctive: as, the earth moves in a circle, or an ellipse; but it does not move in a circle, therefore it moves in an ellipse. Watts.

DISJUNCTIVELY. adv. [from disjunctive.] Distinctly; separately.

What he observes of the numbers disjunctively and apart, reason suggests to be applicable to the whole body united. Dray of P. ty.

DISK. n. f. [discus, Latin.]

1. The face of the sun, or any planet, as it appears to the eye.

The disk of Phœbus, when he climbs on high, Appears at first but as a bloodshot eye. Dryden.

It is to be considered, that the rays, which are equally refrangible, do fall upon a circle answering to the sun's disk. Newton.

Mercury's disk

Can scarce be caught by philosophic eye, Lost in the near effulgence. Thomson.

2. A broad piece of iron thrown in the ancient sports; a quoit.

The crystal of the eye, which in a fish is a ball in any land animal is a disk or bowl; being hereby fitted for the clearer sight of the object. Grew.

In areas varied with mosaic art, Some whirl the disk, and some the jav'lin dart. Pope.

DISKINDNESS. n. f. [dis and kindness.]

1. Want of kindness; want of affection; want of benevolence.

2. Ill turn; injury; act of malignity; detriment.

This discourse is so far from doing any diskindness to the cause, that it does it a real service. Woodward.

DISLIKE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Disinclination; absence of affection; the contrary to fondness.

He then them took, and tempering goodly well Their contrary dislikes with loved means,

Did place them all in order, and compel To keep themselves within their sundry reigns, Together link'd with adamant chains. Spenser.

Your dislikes, to whom I would be pleasing, Do cloud my joys with danger and with sorrow. Shakespeare.

God's grace, that principle of his new birth, gives him continual dislike to sin. Hammond.

Our likings or dislikes are founded rather upon humour and fancy, than upon reason. L'Estr.

Sorrow would have been as silent as thought, as severe as philosophy. It would have reled in inward senses, tacit dislikes. South.

2. Discord; dissension; disagreement.

This sense is not now in use.

This said Aletes, and a murmur rose That shew'd dislike among the christian peers. Farfax.

TO DISLIKE. v. n. [dis and like.] To disapprove; to regard without affection; to regard with ill-will or disgust.

What must he should dislike seems pleasant to him;

What like, offensive. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Ye dislike, and so undo The players, and disgrace the poet too. Denham.

Whoever dislikes the regulations, or grows weary of them, may throw them away. Temple.

DISLIKEFUL. adj. [dislike and full.] Disaffected; malign. Not in use.

I think it best, by an union of manners, and conformity of minds, to bring them to be one people, and to put away the dislikeful conceit of the one and the other. Spenser's Ireland.

TO DISLIKE. v. n. [dis and like.]

To make unlike. Unusual.

Malle your face,

Disinangle you; and, as you can, dislike The truth of your own seeming. Shakespeare.

DISLIKENESS. n. f. [dis and likeness.] Dissimilitude; not resemblance; unlikeness.

That which is not designed to represent any thing but itself, can never be capable of a wrong representation, nor mislead us from the true apprehension of any thing by its dislikeness to it; and such, excepting those of substances, are all our own complex ideas. Locke.

DISLIKER. n. f. [from dislike.] A disapprover; one that is not pleased.

There is a point, which whoever can touch, will never fail of pleasing a majority, so great that the dislikers will be forced to fall in with the herd. Swift.

TO DISLIMB. v. a. [dis and limb.] To dilaniate; to tear limb from limb. L'E.

TO DISLIMN. v. a. [dis and limn.] To unpaint; to strike out of a picture.

That which is now a horse, even with a thought The rack dislimns, and makes it indistinct As water is in water. Shakespeare.

the king's party. Clarendon.

Those, though in highest place, who slight and disoblige their friends, shall infallibly come to know the value of them, by having none when they shall most need them. South.

It is in the power of more particular persons in this kingdom, than in any other, to disoblige
the government, when they are disobliged.

Addison's Freeholder.

My plan has given offence to some gentlemen, whom it would not be very safe to disoblige.

Addison's Guardian.

We love and esteem our clergy, and are apt to lay some weight upon their opinion, and would not willingly disoblige them. Swift.

If a woman suffers her lover to see she is loth to disoblige him, let her beware of an encroacher.
Clarissa.

DISOBLIGING. participial adj. [from dis-oblige.] Disgusting; unpleasing; offensive.

tity of one thing, or one part of the same thing, to another; want of symmetry; disparity.

Not to affect many proposed matches
Of her own clime, complexion, and degree, Whereto we see in all things nature tends:
Foh! one may smell, in such, a will most rank,
Foul disproportion; thoughts unnatural.

Reasoning, I oft admire
How nature, wise and frugal, could commit
Such disproportions; with superfluous hand
So many nobler bodies to create,

Greater, so many fold, to this one use.

Perhaps, from greatness, state and pride,
Thus surpris'd, she may fall:

Sleep does disproportion hide,
And, death resembling, equals all.

For their strength,
The disproportion is so great, we cannot but Expect a fatal consequence.

What did the liquid to th' assembly call,
To give their aid to form the pond'rous ball?

First tell us, why did any come? next, why
In such a disproportion to the day?

That we are designed for a more exalted happiness than can be derived from the things of this life, we may infer from their vast disproportion to the desires and capacities of our soul.

TO DISPROPORTION. v. a. [from the noun.] To mismatch; to join things unsuitable in quantity or form; to join unfitly.

These fits deformity to mock my body,
To shape my legs of an unequal size,
To disproportion me in every part.

Distance and men's fears have so enlarged the truth, and so disproportioned every thing, that we have made the little troop of discontent a gallant army, and already measured by the evening shadow.

Musick craveth your acquaintance: many are of such disproportioned spirits, that they avoid her company.

We on earth, with undiscording voice,
May rightly answer that melodious noise;
As once we did, till disproportion'd fun
Jarr'd against nature's chime.

DISPROPORTIONABLE. adj. [from disproportion.] Unsuitable in form or quantity; not duly regulated in regard to something else.

Doubts and fears are the sharpest passions:
through these false optics all that you see is like the evening shadows, disproportionable to the truth, and strangely longer than the true substance.

Had the obliquity been greater, the earth had not been able to endure the disproportionable differences of season.

heat disseminated throughout the body of the earth. Wentward.

The Jews are indeed disseminated through all the trading parts of the world. Addison.

By firmness of mind, and freedom of speech, the gospel was disseminated at first, and must still be maintained. Atterbury.

DISSEMINATION. n. f. [diffeminatio, Lat.]
The act of scattering like seed; the act of sowing or spreading.

Though now at the greatest distance from the beginning of error, yet we are almost lost in its diffeminatio, whose ways are boundless, and confess no circumscription. Brown.

DISSEMINATOR. n. f. [diffeminator, Lat.]
He that scatters; a scatterer; a sower;
a spreader.

Men, vehemently thirsting after a name in the world, hope to acquire it by being the diffeminators of novel doctrines. Decay of Piety.

DISSENSION. n. f. [diffensio, Latin.] Disagreement; strife; discord; contention; difference; quarrel; breach of union.

Friends now fast sworn,
Whose hours, whose bed, whose meal, whose exercise,

Are still together; who twine, as 'twere, in love
Unseparable, shall within this hour,
On a diffension of a doit, break out
To bitterest enmity. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Now join your hands, and with your hands your hearts,

That no diffension hinder government. Shaksp.
He appealed the diffension then arising about religion. Knoles.

Grown
In wealth and multitude, factious they grow;
But first among the priests diffension springs. Milton.

Debates, diffensions, uproars are thy joy;
Provok'd without offence, and practis'd to destroy. Dryden.

DISSENSIOUS. adj. [from diffension.] Disposed to discord; quarrelsome; factious;
contentious.

Either in religion they have a diffensious head,
Or in the commonwealth a factious head. Afham.

Who are they that complain unto the king
That I am stern? They love his grace but lightly, That fill his ears with such diffensious rumours. Shakespeare.

You diffensious rogues,
That rubbing the poor itch of your opinion,
Make yourselves scabs. Shakespeare.

To DISSENT. v. n. [diffentio, Latin.]

1. To disagree in opinion; to think in a contrary manner.

Let me not be any occasion to defraud the publick of what is best, by any morose or perverse diffentings. King Charles.

What cruelty of heathens has not been matched by the inhumanity of diffenting christians?

Decay of Piety.

There are many opinions in which multitudes of men diffent from us, who are as good and wise
as ourselves. Addison.

2. To differ; to be of a contrary nature.

We see a general agreement in the secret opinion of men, that every man ought to embrace the religion which is true, and to shun, as hurtful, whatever diffent from it, but that most which doth farthest diffent. Hosker.

3. To differ from the established church.

How will diffenting brethren retit?

What will malignants say? Hudibras.

DISSENT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Disagreement; difference of opinion; declaration of difference of opinion.

In propositions, where though the proofs in view are of most moment, yet there are grounds to suspect that there is proof as considerable to be produced on the contrary side; there diffense or diffent are voluntary actions. Locke.

What could be the reason of this general diffent from the notion of the resurrection, seeing that almost all of them did believe the immortality of the soul? Bentley's Sermons.

2. Contrariety of nature; opposite quality.
Not in use.

The diffents of the menstria! or strong waters may hinder the incorporation, as well as the dis- sent of the metals. Therefore where the menstria are the same, and yet the incorporation followeth not, the diffent is in the metals. Bacon.

DISSENTANEOUS. adj. [from diffent.] Disagreeable; inconsistent; contrary.

DISSENTER. n. f. [from diffent.]

1. One that disagrees, or declares his disagreement, from an opinion.

smaller indispositions do a proportionable dis- sevice. Celiver.

DISSEVICEABLE. adj. [from dissevice.]
Injurious; mischievous; hurtful.

DISSEVICEABLENESS. n. f. [from disse- viceable.] Injury; harm; hurt; mischief; damage.

All action being for some end, and not the end itself, its aptness to be commanded or for-bidden must be founded upon its serviceableness or disseviceableness to some end. Norris.

To DISSETTLE. v. a. [dis and settle.] To unsettle; to unfix.

To DISSEVER. v. a. [dis and sever. In this word the particle dis makes no change in the signification, and therefore the word, though supported by great authorities, ought to be ejected from our language.] To part in two;
to break; to divide; to sunder; to separate; to disunite.

Shortly had the storm so dissevered the company, which the day before had tarried together, that most of them never met again, but were swallowed up. Sidney.

the diffisition of that air was great. Boyle.

DISSIMILAR. adj. [dis and similar.] Unlike; heterogeneous.

Simple oil is reduced into disimilar parts, and yields a sweet oil, very differing from salt oil.
Boyle.

The light, whose rays are all alike refrangible,
I call simple, homogeneous, and similar; and that,
whose rays are some more refrangible than others,
I call compound, heterogeneous, and disimilar.
Newton.

If the fluid be supposed to consist of heterogeneous particles, we cannot conceive how those disimilar parts can have a like situation.
Bentley.

DISSIMILARITY. n. f. [from disimilar.]
Unlikeness; dissimilitude.

If the principle of reunion has not its entry in this life, whenever the attractions of sense cease, the acquired principles of disimilarity must repel these beings from their centre: so that the principle of reunion, being set free by death, must drive these beings towards God their centre;
and the principle of disimilarity, forcing him to repel them with infinite violence from him, must make them infinitely miserable. Chryme.

DISSIMILITUDE. n. f. [disimilitudo, Lat.]
Unlikeness; want of resemblance.

Thereupon grew marvellous disimilitudes, and by reason thereof jealousies, heartburnings, jars, and discords. Hosker.

We doubt whether the Lord, in different circumstances, did frame his people unto any utter disimilitudo, either with Egyptians or any other nation. Hosker.

The disimilitudo between the Divinity and images, shews that images are not a suitable means whereby to worship God. Stillingfleet.

As human society is founded in the similitude of some things, so it is promoted by some certain disimilitudes. Grew.

Women are curious observers of the likeness of children to parents, that they may, upon finding disimilitudo, have the pleasure of hinting un-charity. Pope's Odyssey, Notes.

DISSIMULATION. n. f. [diffimulatio, Lat.]
The act of dissimbling; hypocrisy; fallacious appearance; false pretensions.

Diffimulation is but a faint kind of policy; for it asketh a strong wit, and a strong heart, to know when to tell truth, and to do it. Bacon.

He added not; and Satan, bowing low
His grey diffimulation, disappear'd Into thin air diffus'd. Milton.

Diffimulation may be taken for a bare concealment of one's mind; in which sense we commonly say, that it is prudence to diffemble injuries. South.

DISSIPABLE. adj. [from dissipate.] Easily scattered; liable to dispersion.

The heat of those plants is very dissipable, which under the earth is contained and held in; but when it cometh to the air, it exhalath. Bacon.

The parts of plants are very tender, as consisting of corpuscles which are extremely small and light, and therefore the more easily dissipable. Woodward's Natural History.

TO DISSIPATE. v. a. [dissipatus, Lat.]

1. To scatter every way; to disperse.

The heat at length grows so great, that it again dissipates and bears off those corpuscles which it brought. Woodward.

It is covered with skin and hair, to quench and dissipate the force of any stroke, and retard the edge of any weapon. Roy.

The circling mountains eddy in,
From the bare wild, the dissipated storm. Thomson.

2. To scatter the attention.

This slavery to his passions produced a life irregular and dissipated. Savage's Life.

Highly it concerns his glory now
To frustrate and dissolve the magic spells. Milton.

8. To be relaxed by pleasure.

Angels dissolv'd in hallelujahs lie. Dryden.

TO DISSOLVE. v. n.

1. To be melted; to be liquefied.

All putrefaction, if it dissolve not in rarefaction, will in the end issue into plants or living creatures bred of putrefaction. Bacon.

A wax dissolves, as ice begins to run
And trickle into drops before the sun,
So melts the youth, and languishes away. Addison's Ovid.

2. To sink away; to fall to nothing.

If there be more, more woeful, hold it in;
For I am almost ready to dissolve, Hearing of this. Shakespeare's King Lear.

3. To melt away in pleasures.

DISSOLVENT. adj. [from dissolve.] Having the power of dissolving or melting.

In man and viviparous quadrupeds, the food, moistened with the spittle, is first chewed, then swallowed into the stomach, where, being mingled with dissolvent juices, it is concocted, macerated, and reduced into a chyle. Roy.

Soon docile to the secret acts of ill,
With smiles I could betray, with temper kill.

Prior.

DOCT'LITY. n. f. [docilité, Fr. from docilitas, Latin.] Aptness to be taught; readiness to learn.

All the perfection they allowed his understanding was aptness and docility, and all that they attributed to his will was a possibility to be virtuous.

South.

What is more admirable than the fitness of every creature for use? the docility of an elephant, and the infirmity of a camel for travelling in deserts?

Grew.

DOCK. n. f. [bocca, Saxon.] A plant; a weed.

The species are seventeen, ten of which grow wild, several of them being used in medicine; and the sort called the oriental burdock, is said to be the true rhubarb.

Miller.

Nothing teems

But hateful docks, rough thistles, keekies, hurs, Losing both beauty and utility.

Shakespeare.

My love for gentle Dermot faster grows
Than yon tall dock that rises to thy nose:

Cut down the dock, 'twill sprout again; but know,

Love rooted out, again will never grow.

Swift.

DOCK. n. f.

1. The stump of the tail, which remains after docking.

2. The solid part of the tail.

The tail of a great rhinoceros is not well described by Bontius. The dock is about half an inch thick, and two inches broad, like an apothecary's spatula.

Government of the Tongue.

It is not unnecessary to digest the documents of cracking authors into several classes.

Harris.

DODDER. n. f. [southeren, to shoot up, Dutch. Skinner.]

Dodder is a singular plant: when it first shoots from the seed it has little roots, which pierce the earth near the roots of other plants; but the capillaments of which it is furnished soon after clinging about these plants, the roots wither away. From this time it propagates itself along the stalks of the plant, entangling itself about them. It has no leaves, but consists of capillaments or stalks, brownish with a cast of red, which run to great lengths. They have tubercles, which sit there fast down to the plant, and by means of which they absorb the juices destined for its nourishment.

Hill.

DO'DDERED. adj. [from dotter.] Overgrown with dodder; covered with supererescant plants.

Near the hearth a laurel grew,
Dodder'd with age, whose boughs encompass round

The household gods, and shade the holy ground.

The twelfth part.

'Tis doecatemerion thus describ'd:

Thrice ten degrees, which every sign contains,
Let twelve exhaust, that not one part remains;
It follows straight, that every twelfth confuses
Two whole and one half portion of the signs.

Creech.

To DODGE. v. n. [probably corrupted from dog; to shift, and play fly tricks, like a dog.] The word in all its senses is low and vulgar.

1. To use craft; to deal with tergiversation; to play mean tricks; to use low shifts.

If in good offices and due retributions we may not be pinching and niggardly, it argues an earthly and ignoble mind, where we have apparently wronged, to higgie and dodge in the amends.

Hale's Contemplation.

The consideration should make men grow weary of dodging and shewing tricks with God.

South.

2. To shift place as another approaches.

For he had, any time this ten years full,
Dodg'd with him betwixt Cambridge and the Bull.

Milton.

3. To play fast and loose; to raise expectations and disappoint them.

You know my passion for Martha, and what a dance she has led me; she dodged with me above thirty years.

Addison.

The chaffering with dissenters, and dodging about this or t'other ceremony, is but like opening a few wickets, and leaving them a-jar, by which no more than one can get in at a time.

Swift.

DO'DKIN. n. f. [duyken, Dutch.] A doitkin, or little doit; a contemptuous name for a low coin.

Thy blood-revolving breast doth move?

Heav'n's king, who doff's himself our flesh to wear,

Comes not to rule in wrath, but serve in love.

Cyphar.

3. To put away; to get rid of.

Your eye in Scotland

Would create soldiers, and make women fight,

To doff their dire distresses.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

4. To shift off; to delay; to refer to another time; to put off.

Every day thou doff'st me with some device,
Lago; and rather keep'st from me all convenience,
Than supply'st me with the least advantage of hope.

Shakespeare's Othello.

Away, I will not have to do with you.—

—Canst thou so doff me?

Shakespeare.

DOG. n. f. [dogge, Dutch; canis, Lat.]

1. A domestic animal remarkably various in his species; comprising the mastiff, the spaniel, the bull-dog, the greyhound, the hound, the terrier, the cur, with many others. The larger sort are used as a guard; the less for sports.

Such smiling rogues as these looth every passion:

Renegs, affirm, and turn their halcyon beaks

With every gale and vary of their masters,

As knowing naught, like dogs, but following.

Shakespeare's King Lear

Why should we not think a watch and pistol as distinct species one from another, as a horse and a dog?

Locke.

The clamour roars of men, and boys and dogs.

Thompson.

2. A constellation called Sirius, or Canicula, rising and setting with the sun during the canicular days, or dogdays.

It is part of the jaw of a shark, or dogfish. Woodward.

DOGFLY. n. f. [dog and fly.] A voracious biting fly.

Thump-buckler Mars began,
And at Minerva with a lance of brass he head-long ran;

These vile words offering his blows, Thou dog-fly, what's the cause?

Thou makest gods fight thus? Chapman's Iliad.

DOGGED. adj. [from dog.] Sullen; sour; morose; ill-humoured; gloomy.

Your uncle must not know but you are dead:
I'll fill these dogged spies with false reports.

Shakespeare's King John.

Dogged York, that reaches at the moon,
Whole over-weening arm I have pluck'd back,

By false accuse doth level at my life. Shaksp.

Few miles on horseback had they jogged,
But fortune unto them turn'd dogged. Hudibras.

DOGGEDLY. adv. [from dogged.] Sullenly; gloomily; sourly; morosely.

DOGGEDNESS. n. f. [from dogged.] Gloom of mind; sullenness; moroseness.

DOGGREEL. adj. [from dog.] Loosed from the measures or rules of regular poetry; vile; despicable; mean: used of verses.

Then hasten Og and Doeg to rehearse,
Two fools that crutch their feeble sense on verse;
Who by my muse to all succeeding times
Shall live, in spite of their own dogg'el rhymes. Dryden.

Your wit burlesque may one step higher climb,
And in his sphere may judge all dogg'el rhyme. Dryden.

It is a dispute among the critics, whether burlesque poetry runs best in heroic verse, like that of the Dispensary; or in doggrel, like that of Hudibras. Addison's Spectator.

DOGGREEL. n. f. Mean, despicable, worthless verses.

The hand and head were never lost of those Who dealt in dogg'el, or who pin'd in prose. Dryden's Juvenal.

The vilest dogg'el Grubstreet sends
Will pass for yours with foes and friends. Swift.

DOGGISH. adj. [from dog.] Churlish; brutal.

DOGHEARTED. adj. [dog and heart.] Cruel; pitiless; malicious.

His unkindness,
That stript her from his benediction, turn'd her
To foreign casualties, gave her dear rights
To his doghearted daughters. Shakespeare.

DOG

DOG-HOLE. n. f. [dog and hole.] A vile hole; a mean habitation.

France is a doghole, and it no more merits the tread of a man's foot: to the wars. Shakspere.

But could you be content to bid adieu

To the dear playhouse, and the players too, Sweet country seats are purchas'd ev'ry where,
With lands and gardens, at less price than here
You hire a darksome doghole by the year. Dryden's Juvenal.

Reverse your ornaments, and hang them all
On some patch'd doghole ck'd with ends of wall. Pope.

DOGKENNEL. n. f. [dog and kenel.] A little hut or house for dogs.

A certain nobleman, beginning with a dog-kenel, never lived to finish the palace he had contrived. Dryden.

DOGHOUSE. n. f. [dog and house.] An insect that harbours on dogs.

DOGMA. n. f. [Latin.]

1. Established principle; doctrinal notion.

Our poet was a stoick philosopher, and all his moral sentences are drawn from the dogmas of that sect. Dryden.

2. [In canon law.] Dogma is that determination which consists in, and has a relation to, some casuistical point of doctrine, or some doctrinal part of the christian faith. Ayliffe's Parergon.

DOGMA'TICAL. adj. [from dogma.] Authoritative; thorative; magisterial; positive; in the manner of a philosopher laying down the first principles of a sect.

The dim and bounded intellect of man seldom prosperously adventures to be dogmatical about things that approach to infinite, whether in vastness or littleness. Boyle.

I laid by my natural diffidence and scepticism for a while, to take up that dogmatical way which is so much his character. Dryden.

Learning gives us a discovery of our ignorance, and keeps us from being peremptory and dogmatical in our determinations. Collier on Pride.

Criticks write in a positive dogmatick way, without either language, genius, or imagination. Spettator.

One of these authors is indeed so grave, sententious, dogmatical a rogue, that there is no enduring him. Swift.

DOGMA'TICALLY. adv. [from dogmatical.] Magisterially; positively.

I shall not presume to interpose dogmatically in a controversy, which I look never to see decided. South.

DOGMA'TICALNESS. n. f. [from dogmatical.] The quality of being dogmatical; magisterialness; mock authority.

DOGMATIST. n. f. [dogmatiste, Fr.] A magisterial teacher; a positive asserter; a bold advancer of principles.

I could describe the vanity of bold opinion, which the dogmatists themselves demonstrate in all the controversies they are engaged in. Glawville.

A dogmatist in religion is not a great way off from a bigot, and is in high danger of growing up to be a bloody persecutor. Watts.

TO DOGMATIZE. v. n. [from dogma.] To assert positively; to advance without distrust; to teach magisterially.

These, with the pride of dogmatizing schools, impos'd on nature arbitrary rules;

Forc'd her their vain inventions to obey,
And move as learned frenzy trac'd the way. Blackmore.

DOI

DOGMATIZER. n. f. [from dogmatize.] An asserter; a magisterial teacher; a bold advancer of opinions.

Such opinions, being not entered into the confessions of our church, are not properly chargeable either on papists or protestants, but on particular dogmatizers of both parties. Hammond.

DOGROSE. n. f. [dog and rose.] The flower of the hip.

Of the rough or hairy excrecence, those on the briar, or dogrose, are a good instance. Derham.

DOGSLEEP. n. f. [dog and sleep.] Pretended sleep.

Juvenal indeed mentions a drowsy husband, who rais'd an estate by snoring; but then he is represented to have slept what the common people call dogsleep. Addison.

DOGSMEAT. n. f. [dog and meat.] Refuse; vile stuff; offal like the flesh sold to feed dogs.

His reverence bought of me the flowers of all the market; these are but dogsmeat to 'em. Dryden.

DOGSTAR. n. f. [dog and star; canicula, Lat.] The star which gives the name to the dogdays.

All thus the raging dogstar's sultry heat,
And from the half-unpeopled town retreat. Addison.

DOGSTOOTH. n. f. [from dog and tooth.] A plant. Miller.

DOGTROT. n. f. [dog and trot.] A gentle trot like that of a dog.

This said, they both advanc'd, and rode
A dogtrot through the howling crowd. Hudibras.

DOGWEARY. adj. [dog and weary.] Tired as a dog; excessively weary.

Oh, master, master, I have watch'd so long,
That I'm dogweary. Shakespeare.

DOGWOOD. n. f. A species of cornelian cherry.

DOI'LY. n. f. A species of woollen stuff, so called, I suppose, from the name of the first maker.

We should be as weary of one set of acquaintance, though never so good, as we are of one suit, though never so fine: a fool, and a doily buff, would now and then find days of grace, and be worn for variety. Congreve's Way of the World.

DOINGS. n. f. [from To do.] This word has hardly any singular.]

1. Things done; events; transactions.

I have but kill'd a fly.—
—But how if that fly had a father and mother?
How would he hang his slender gilded wings,
And buzz lamented doings in the air! Shaksp.

2. Feats; actions: good or bad.

The next degree was to mark all Zelmane's doings, speeches, and fashions, and to take them unto herself, as a pattern of worthy proceeding. Sedary.

If I'm traduc'd by tongues which neither know
My faculties nor person, yet will be
The chronicles of my doing, let me say
'Tis but the fate of place, and the rough brake
That virtue must go through. Shakespeare.

At length a reverend fire among them came,
And of their doings great dislike declar'd,
And testified against their ways. Milton.

3. Behaviour; conduct.

Never the earth on his round shoulders bare
A maid train'd up from high or low degree,
That in her doings better could compare
Mirth with respect, few words with courtesy. Sidney.

4. Conduct; dispensation.

Dangerous it were for the feeble brains of man
To wade far into the doings of the Most High. Hooker.

DOL

5. Stir; bustle; tumult.
Shall there be then, in the mean while, no doings?
Hooker.
6. Festivity; merriment: as, jolly doings.
7. This word is now only used in a ludicrous sense, or in low mean language.
After such miraculous doings, we are not yet in a condition of bringing France to our terms.
Swift.

DOIT. n. f. [duyt, Dutch; doght, Erse.]

A small piece of money.

When they will not give a doit to relieve a lame beggar, they will lay out ten to see a dead Indian.
Shakespeare's Tempest.

In Anna's wars a soldier, poor and old,
Had dearly earn'd a little purse of gold;
Tir'd with a tedious march, one luckless night
He slept, poor dog! and lost it to a doit. Pope.

DOLE. n. f. [from deal; ðelan, Sax.]

1. The act of distribution or dealing.

It was your presumption,
That in the dole of blows your son might drop.
Shakespeare.

The personal fruition in any man cannot reach to feel great riches: there is a custody of them, or a power of dole and donative of them, or a fame of them, but no solid use to the owner.
Bacon.

At her general dole,
Each receives his ancient soul. Cleaveland.

2. Any thing dealt out or distributed.

Now, my masters, happy man be his dole, say I; every man to his business. Shakespeare.

Let us, that are unhurt and whole,
Fall on, and happy man be 's dole. Hudibras.

3. Provisions or money distributed in charity.

They had such firm dependence on the day,
That need grew pamp'ring, and forgot to pray;
So sure the dole, so ready at their call,
They stood prepar'd to see the manna fall.
Dryden.

Clients of old were feasted; now a poor
Divided dole is dealt at th' outward door,
Which by the hungry rout is soon dispatch'd.
Dryden's Journal.

4. Blows dealt out.

What if his eye-sight, for to Israel's God
Nothing is hard, by miracle restur'd,
He now be dealing dole among his foes,
And over heaps of slaughter'd walk his way?
Milton.

5. [from dolor.] Grief; sorrow; misery.

Obsolete.
Yonder they lie; the poor old man, their father, making such pitiful dole over them, that all beholders take his part with weeping. Shakspeare.

Our sometime sister, now our queen,
Have we, as 'twere, with a defeated joy,
With mirth in funeral, and with dirge in marriage,
In equal scale weighing delight and dole,
Taken to wife. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

They might hope to change
Torment with ease, and sweetest recompense, Dole with delight. Milton's Paradise Lost.

To DOL. v. a. [from the noun.] To deal; to distribute. DiB.

For none but you, or who of you it learns,
Can rightfully aread to doleful try. Spenser.

With screwed face, and doleful whine, they only ply with senseless harangues of conscience against carnal ordinances. South.

DOL

- Just then the hero cast a doleful cry,
And in those ardent flames began to fry:
The blind contagion rag'd within his veins.
Dryden.
2. Melancholy; afflicted; feeling grief; sorrowful.

How oft my doleful fire cried to me, tarry,
son,
When first he spied my love? Sidney.

3. Dismal; impressing sorrow; dolorifick.

It watereth the heart to the end it may fructify; maketh the virtuous, in trouble, full of magnanimity and courage; serveth as a most approved remedy against all doleful and heavy accidents, which befall men in this present life.
Hooker.

No light, but rather darkness visible,
Serv'd only to discover lights of woe,
Regions of sorrow, doleful shades, where peace
And rest can never dwell! Milton.

Happy the mortal man, who now at last
Has through this doleful vale of mis'ry pass'd;
Who to his destin'd stage has carried on
The tedious load, and laid his burden down.
Prior.

DOLEFULLY. adv. [from doleful.] In a doleful manner; sorrowfully; dismally; querulously.

Ten thousand dollars for our gen'ral use. Shakspeare.

DOLORIFICK. adj. [dolorificus, Latin.]

That causes grief or pain.

The pain returned, dissipating that vapour which obstructed the nerves, and giving the dolorifick motion free passage again. Ray.

This, by the softness and rarity of the fluid, is insensible, and not dolorifick. Arbutn. on Air.

DO'LO'ROUS. adj. [from dolor, Latin.]

1. Sorrowful; doleful; dismal; gloomy; impressing sorrow.

We are taught, by his example, that the presence of dolorous and dreadful objects, even in minds most perfect, may, as clouds, overcast all seasonable joy. Hooker.

You take me in too dolorous a sense:
I spake it you for your comfort. Shakspeare.

Through many a dark and dreary vale
They pass'd and many a region dolorous,
O'er many a frozen, many a fiery alp, Rocks, caves, lakes, fens, bogs, dens, and shades of death. Milton.

Talk not of ruling in this dolorous gloom, Nor think vain words, he cried, can ease my doom. Pope.

2. Painful.

Their dispatch is quick, and less dolorous than the paw of the bear, or teeth of the lion.
Mars's Antidote against Atheism.

DO'LOUR. n. f. [dolor, Latin.]

1. Grief; sorrow.

I've words too few to take my leave of you,
When the tongue's office should be prodigal,
To breathe th' abundant dolour of the heart.
Shakspeare.

dolphins. Peechum.

DOLT. n. f. [dol, Teutonic.] A heavy stupid fellow; a blockhead; a thick-skull; a loggerhead.

Let dolts in haste some altar fair erect
To those high pow'rs, which idly sit above. Sidney.

Thou hast not half that power to do me harm,
As I have to be hurt: oh gull, oh dolt,
As ignorant as dirt! Shakspeare's Othello.

Like men condemn'd to thunder-bolts,
Who, ere the blow, become mere dolts;
They neither have the hearts to stay,
Nor wit enough to run away. Hudibras.

Wood's adulterate copper,
Which, as he scatter'd, we, like dolts,
Mistook at first for thunder-bolts. Swift.

DO'LTISH. adj. [from dolt.] Stupid; mean; dull; blockish.

Dametas, the most arrant doltish clown that ever was without the privilege of a bauble. Sidney.

Assur'd in my faith, a friendly guest;
Approach the dome, the social banquet share. Pope's Odyssey.

2. A hemispherical arch; a cupola.

DOMESTICAL. } adj. [domesticus, La-DOMESTICK. } tin.]

1. Belonging to the house; not relating to things publick.

The necessities of man had at the first no other helps and supplies than domestical; such as that which the prophet implieth, saying, Can a mother forget her child? Hooker.

The practical knowledge of the domestic duties is the principal glory of a woman. Clarissa.

2. Private; done at home; not open.

In this their domestic celebration of the pass-over, they divided supper into two courses. Hooker.
Beholding thus, O happy as a queen!
We cry: but shift the gaudy, flatter'ing scene,
View her at home in her domestic light,
For thither the must come, at least at night. Granville.

3. Inhabiting the house; not wild.

The faithful pudent husband is an honest, tractable, and domestic animal. Addison.

4. Not foreign; intestine.

Domestic evils, for that we think we can master them at all times, are often permitted to run on forward, till it be too late to recall them. Hooker, Dedication.

Equality of two domestic pow'rs Breeds scrupulous faction. Shakespeare.

Combine together 'gainst the enemy;
For these domestic and particular broils
Are not the question here. Shaksp. King Lear.

Such they were who might presume to have done
Much for the king and honour of the state;
Having the chiefest actions undergone,
Both foreign and domestic, of late. Daniel.

Next to the sin of those who began that rebellion, theirs must needs be, who hindered the speedy suppressing of it, by domestic dissensions. King Charles.

TO DOMESTICATE. v. a. [from domestic.] To make domestic; to withdraw from the publick. Clarissa.

DOMESTICK. n. f. One kept in the same house.

A servant dwells remote from all knowledge of his lord's purposes: he lives as a kind of foreigner under the same roof; a domestic, and yet a stranger too. South.

1. Power; dominion.

Thou and thine usurp
The domination, royalties, and rights
Of this oppressed buy. Shaksp. King John.

2. Tyranny; insolent authority.

Maximian traded with the Goths in the product of his own estate in Thracia, the place of his nativity; whither he retired, to withdraw from the unjust domination of Opilius Macrinus. Arbutnot on Coins.

3. One highly exalted in power: used of angelick beings.

He heav'n of heav'n's, and all the powers therein,
By thee created; and by thee threw down
Th' aspiring dominations. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Hear, all ye angels, progeny of light,
Thrones, dominations, principdoms, virtues, pow'rs! Milton.

DOMINATIVE. adj. [from dominate.] Impetuous; insolent. DiD.

DOMINATOR. n. f. [Latin.] The presiding or predominant power or influence.

Jupiter and Mars are dominators for this north-west part of the world, which maketh the people impatient of servitude, lovers of liberty martial, and courageous. Candem's Remains.

TO DOMINER. v. n. [dominer, Latin.]

To rule with insolence; to swell; to bluster; to act without controll.

Go to the feast, revel, and domineer,
Carouse full measure. Shakespeare.

The voice of conscience now is low and weak, chastising the passions, as old Eli did his lustful domineering sons. South.

Both would their little ends secure;
He fights for freedom, she for pow'r:
His wishes tend abroad to roam,
And hers to domineer at home. Prior.

DOMINICAL. adj. [dominicalis, Latin.]

That notes the Lord's day, or Sunday.

The cycle of the moon serves to show the epochs, and that of the sun the dominical letter, throughout all their variations. Holder on Time.

DONARY. n. f. [donarium, Latin.] A thing given to sacred uses.

DONATION. n. f. [donatio, Latin.]

1. The act of giving any thing; the act of bestowing.

He gave us only over beast, fish, fowl,
Dominion absolute; that right we hold
By his donation. Milton's Paradise Lost.

After donation there is an absolute change and alienation made of the property of the thing given: which being so alienated, a man has no more to do with it than with a thing bought with another's money. South.

2. The grant by which any thing is given or conferred.

Howsoever the letter of that donation may be unregarded by men, yet the sense thereof is so imprinted in their hearts, as if every one laid claim for himself unto that which was conferred upon all. Raleigh's Essays.

The kingdoms of the world to thee were giv'n,
Permitted rather, and by thee stamp'd;
Other donation none thou canst produce. Milton.

DONATIVE. n. f. [donatif, French; from donatus, Latin.]

1. A gift; a largess; a present; a dole of money distributed.

The Roman emperor's custom was, at certain solemn times, to bestow on his soldiers a donative; which donative they received wearing garlands upon their heads. Hooker.

They were entertained with publick shews and donatives, to make them more easily digest their lost liberty. Dryden.

2. [In law.] A benefice merely given and collated by the patron to a man, without either presentation to the ordinary, or institution by the ordinary, or induction by his orders. Cowell.

Never did sleep carry double truer;
His is the donative, and mine the cure. Cleveland.

DONE. The part. pass. of To do.

Another like fair tree eke grew thereby,
Whereof whofo did eat, elisions did know
Both good and evil: O mournful memory!
That tree, through one man's fault, hath done us all to dye. Spenser's Fairy Queen.

DONE. a kind of interjection. The word by which a wager is concluded: when a wager is offered, he that accepts it says done.

Done: the wager? Shakespeare's Tempest.

One thing, sweet-heart, I will ask;
Take me for a new-fashion'd mask.
—Done: but my bargain shall be this,
I'll throw my mask off when I kiss. Cleveland.
Twas done and done, and the fox, by content, was to be the judge. L'Estrange.

DONJON. n. f. [now corrupted to donjon, from dominionum, low Latin, according to Menage.] The highest and strongest tower of the castle, in which prisoners were kept; as in Chaucer. It is now used of subterraneous prisons.

The grete toure, that was so thicke and strong,
Which of the castle was the chief donjon,
Wherein the knights were in prison,
Was evin joynt to the garden-wall,
Ther as this Emely had her playing. Chaucer.

DONOR. n. f. [from dono, Latin.] A giver; a bestower; one who gives any thing.

Litters thick besiege the donor's gate,
And begging lords and teeming ladies wait
The promis'd dole. Dryden's Farnal.

It is a mighty check to benevolent tempers to consider how often good designs are frustrated and perverted to purposes, which, could the donors themselves have foreseen, they would have been very loth to promote. Atterbury.

DONSHIP. n. f. [from don.] Quality or rank of a gentleman or knight.

I'm none of those,
Your bosom-friends, as you suppose;
But Ralph himself, your trusty squire,
Wh' has dragg'd your donship out o' th' mire. Hudibras.

DOODLE. n. f. [a cant word, perhaps corrupted from do little: faincant.] A trifler; an idler.

TO DOOM. v. a. [deman, Saxon.]

1. To judge.

Use through malice fall'n,
Father of mercy and grace! thou didst not doom
So strictly, but much more to pity incline.
Milton.

2. To condemn to any punishment; to sentence.

He may be doom'd to chains, to shame, to death,
While proud Hippolitus shall mount his throne.
Smith.

Justly th' impartial fates conspire,
Dooming that son to be the fire
Of such another son.
Granville.

3. To pronounce condemnation upon any.
- Minos, the strict inquisitor, appears,
And lives and crimes, with his assessors, hears;
Round in his urn the blended ball he rolls,
Absolves the just, and dooms the guilty souls.
Dryden's Æneid.

4. To command judicially or authoritatively.

Have I a tongue to doom my brother's death,
And shall that tongue give pardon to a slave.
Shakspere.

5. To define; to command by uncontrollable authority.

Fate and the gods, by their supreme command,
Have doom'd our ships to seek the Latian land.
Dryden's Æneid.

I have no will but what your eyes ordain;
Destin'd to love, as they are doom'd to reign.
Granville.

DOOM. n. f. [hom, Sax. dorm, Dutch.]

1. Judicial sentence; judgment.

He's dead, my lord, and all his pow'rs do yield;
And humbly thus, with balsters on their necks,
Expect your highness' doom of life or death.
Shakspere.

To Satan, first in sin, his doom applied,
Though in mysterious terms, judg'd as then best.
Milton.

And now, without redemption, all mankind
Must have been lost, adjudg'd to death and hell
By doom severe.
Milton.

In the great day, wherein the secrets of all hearts shall be laid open, no one shall be made to answer for what he knows nothing of; but shall receive his doom, his conscience accusing or ex-cusing him.
Locke.

2. The great and final judgment.

Search Windsor Castle, elves, within and out;
Strew good luck, cupids, on every sacred room,
That it may stand till the perpetual doom.
Shaksp.

3. Condemnation; judicial sentence.

Revoke thy doom,
Or whilst I can vent clamour from my throat,
I'll tell thee thou dost evil.
Shaksp. King Lear.

4. Determination declared.

If friend or foe, let him be gently us'd.
—Revoke that doom of mercy, for 'tis Clifford.
Shakspere.

The indispensable necessity of sincere obedience shuts the door against all temptations to carnal security.
Hammond.

5. Out of Door, or DOORS. No more to be found; quite gone; fairly sent away.

Should he, who was thy lord, command thee
now,

With a harsh voice and supercilious brow,
To serve duties, thou would'st fear no more;
The gallows and the whip are out of door.
Dryden's Persius.

His imaginary title of fatherhood is out of doors, and Cain is no prince over his brother.
Locke.

6. At the Door of any one. Imputable; chargeable upon him.

In any of which parts if I have failed, the fault lies wholly at my door.
Dryden.

7. Next Door to. Approaching to; near to; bordering upon.

Why then dost treat me with rebukes, instead Of kind condoling cares, and friendly sorrow? Addison's Cato.

D O T

DOT. n. f. [This is derived by Skinner from dotter, German, the white of an egg; and interpreted by him a grume of pus. It has now no such signification, and seems rather corrupted from jot, a point.] A small point or spot made to mark any place in a writing.

To DOT. v. a. To mark with specks.

To DOT. v. n. [from the noun.] To make dots or spots.

Do'TAGE. n. f. [from dote.]

1. Loss of understanding; imbecility of mind; deliriousness.

The soul in all hath one intelligence; Though too much moisture in an infant's brain, And too much driness in an old man's sense, Cannot the prints of outward things retain: Then dath the soul want work, and idle sit; And this we childishness and dotage call. Davies.

I hold, that perfect joy makes all our parts As joyful as our hearts: Our senses tell us, if we please not them, Our love is but a dotage, or a dream. Suckling.

2. Excessive fondness.

If on your head my fury does not turn, Thank that food dotage which so much you scorn. Dryden.

Do'TAL. adj. [dotalis, Latin.] Relating to the portion of a woman; constituting her portion; comprised in her portion.

Shall I, of one poor dotal town possess, My people thin, my wretched country waste, An exil'd prince, and on a shaking throne, Or risk my patron's subjects, or my own? Garrick's Ovid.

Do'TARD. n. f. [from dote.] A man whose age has impaired his intellects; a man in his second childhood, called in some provinces a twichild.

What should a bald fellow do with a comb, a dumb doter with a pipe, or a blind man with a looking-glass? Barton.

2. A man fondly, weakly, and excessively in love.

If in black my lady's brow be deckt, It mourns that painting and usurping air Should ravish doters with a false aspect; And therefore is the born to make black fair. Shakspere.

Our doters upon red and white are incessantly perplexed by the uncertainty both of the continuance of their mistress's kindness, and of the lasting of her beauty. Boyle.

Do'TINGLY. adv. [from doting.] Fondly; by excessive fondness.

That he, to wedlock dotingly betray'd, Should hope in this lewd town to find a maid? Dryden's Juvenal.

Do'TTARD. n. f. This word seems to signify a tree kept low by cutting.

For great trees, we see almost all overgrown trees in church-yards, or near ancient buildings, and the like, are pollards and dotards, and not trees at their full height. Bacon.

Do'TTEREL. n. f. [from dote.] The name of a bird that mimicks gestures.

We see how ready apes and monkeys are to imitate all motions of man; and in catching of dotterels, we see how the foolish bird playeth the ape in gestures. Bacon.

Do'UBLE. adj. [double, Fr. duplex, Lat. duplex, Erse.]

1. Two of a sort; one corresponding to the other; in pairs.

All things are double one against another, and he hath made nothing imperfect. Locke.

2. Twice as much; containing the same quantity repeated. It is sometimes used with so, and sometimes without.

Great honours are great burthens; but on whom They are cast with envy, he doth bear two loads: His cares must still be double to his joys In any dignity. Ben Jonson's Cataline.

This sum of forty thousand pounds is almost double to what is sufficient. Swift.

3. Having one added to another; having more than one in the same order or parallel.

It is a curiosity also to make flowers double, which is effected by often removing them into new earth; as, on the contrary part, double flow-ers, by neglecting, and not removing, prove single. Bacon's Natural History.

I met a reverend, fat, old gouty friar,
With a paunch swollen so high, his double chin
Might rest upon 't. Dryden's Spanish Friar.

4. Twofold; of two kinds.

Thus cursed steel, and more accursed gold,
Gave mischief birth, and made that mischief bold;
And double death did wretched man invade,
By steel assaulted, and by gold betray'd. Dryd.
No star appears to lend his friendly light;
Darkness and tempest make a double night.
Dryden.

5. Two in number.

And if one power did not both see and hear,
Our fights and sounds would always double be.
Devies.

6. Having twice the effect or influence; having the power of two. Not used.

The magnifico is much belov'd,
And hath in his effect a voice potential,
As double as the duke's. Shakespeare's Othello.

7. Deceitful; acting two parts, one openly, the other in secret.

I th' pretence

of double heart. Chronicles.

DOUBLE-FILE. n. f. [duplex placitum, Latin.]

It is that in which the defendant alleges for himself two several matters, in bar of the action, whereof either is sufficient to effect his desire in debarring the plaintiff. Cowell.

DOUBLE QUARREL.

It is a complaint made by any clerk or other to the archbishop of the province, against an inferior ordinary, for delaying justice in some cause ecclesiastical. The effect is, that the archbishop directs his letters, under the authentic seal, to all clerks of his province, commanding them to admonish the said ordinary within nine days to do the justice required, or otherwise to cite him to appear before him or his official; and lastly to intimate to the said ordinary, that if he neither performs the thing enjoined, nor appears at the day assigned, he himself will proceed to perform the justice required. And this seems to be termed a double quarrel, because it is most commonly made against both the judge, and him at whose petition justice is delayed. Cowell.

DOUBLE. adv. Twice over.

I am not so old in proportion to them as I formerly was, which I can prove by arithmetic;
for then I was double their age, which now I am not. Swift.

DOUBLE is much used in composition, generally for doubly, two ways: as,
double-edged, having an edge on each side; or for twice the number or quantity; as, double-died, twice died.

Each asking a gigantick force to rear. Dryden.

DOUBLE-BUTTONED. adj. [double and buttoned.] Having two rows of buttons.

Others you'll see, when all the town's afloat,
Wrapt in th' embraces of a kersey coat,
Or double-button'd frizee. Gay's Trivia.

DOUBLE-DEALER. n. f. [double and dealer.]

A deceitful, subtle, insidious fellow;
one who acts two parts at the same time; one who says one thing and thinks another.

Double-dealers may pass muster for a while;
but all parties wash their hands of them in the conclusion. L'Estrange.

DOUBLE-DEALING. n. f. [double and dealing.] Artifice; dissimulation; low or wicked cunning; the action of one thing with the profession of another.

Thou shalt not be the worse for me; there's gold.—

—But that it would be double-dealing, sir, I would you could make it another. Shakespeare.

Our poets have joined together such qualities as are by nature most compatible; valour with anger, meekness with piety, and prudence with dissimulation: this last union was necessary for the goodness of Ulysses; for, without that, his dissimulation might have degenerated into wickedness and double-dealing. Broom.

To DOUBLE-DIE. v. a. [double and die.]

To die twice over.

Yes, I'll to the royal bed,
Where first the mysteries of our love were acted,
And double-die it with imperial crimson.

1. To enlarge any quantity by addition of the same quantity.

Rumour doth double voice and echo
The numbers of the fear'd. Shaksp. Henry IV.
Pay him six thousand, and deface the bond;
Double six thousand, and then treble that.
Shakespeare.

Our foe's too proud the weaker to assail,
Or doubles his dishonour if he fail. Dryden.

This power of repeating or doubling any idea we have of any distance, and adding it to the former, as often as we will, without being ever able to come to any stop or stint, is that which gives us the idea of immensity. Locke.

This was only the value of the silver: there was besides a tenth part of that number of talents of gold, which, if gold was reckoned in a decuple proportion, will just double the sum.
Arbuthnot on Coins.

2. To contain twice the quantity.

Thus reforc'd against the adverse fleet,
Still doubling ours, brave Rupert leads the way.
Dryden.

Under the line the sun crosseth the line, and maketh two summers and two winters; but in the skirts of the torrid zone it doubles and goeth back again, and so maketh one long summer.
Bacon's Natural History.

Who knows which way she points?
Doubling and turning like a hunted hare!

Find out the meaning of her mind who can.
Dryden.

So keen thy hunters, and thy scent so strong,
Thy turns and doublings cannot save thee long.
Swift.

4. To play tricks; to use sleights.

DO'UBLE. n. f.

1. Twice the quantity or number.

1. The paste of bread, or pies, yet unbaked.

When the gods moulded up the paste of man,
Some of their dough was left upon their hands,
For want of souls, and so they made Egyptians.
Dryden.

You that from pliant paste would fabricke
raile,

Expecting thence to gain immortal praise,
Your knuckles try, and let your sinews know Their power to knead, and give the form to dough. King.

VOL. I.

2. My cake is Dopen. My affair has miscarried; my undertaking has never come to maturity.

My cake is dough, but I'll in among the rest;
Out of hope of all, but my share of the feast.
Shakespeare.

DOUGHBA'KED. adj. [dough and baked.] Unfinished; not hardened to perfection;
soft.

For when, through tasteless flat humility,
In doughbak'd men some hartshornedness we see,
'Tis but his phlegm that's virtuous, and not he.
Danue.

DOUGHTY. adj. [bohzig, Saxon; denght, virtue, Dut.]

1. Brave; noble; illustrious; eminent:
used of men and things.

Such restless passion did all night torment
The flatt'ring courage of that tany knight,
Devising how that doughty tournament
With greatest honour he achieve might.
Fairy Queen.

2. It is now seldom used but ironically, or in burlesque.

If this doughty historian hath any honour or conscience left, he ought to beg pardon. Stillingfl.
She smil'd to see the doughty hero slain;
But, at her smile, the beau reviv'd again. Pope.

DO'UGHY. adj. [from dough.] Unfound;
soft; unhardened.

Your son was misled with a snipt taffata fellow there, whose villanous saffron would have made all the unbaked and doughy youth of a nation in his colour. Shakespeare.

1. A widow with a jointure.

She lingers my desires,
Like to a stepdame or a dowager,
Long wintering on a young man's revenue.
Shakespeare.

Widows have a greater interest in property than either maids or wives; so that it is as unnatural for a dowager as a freeholder to be an enemy to our constitution. Addison.

2. The title given to ladies who survive their husbands.

Catharine no more
Shall be call'd queen; but princely dowager,
And widow to prince Arthur. Shakespeare.

DO'WDY. n. f. An awkward, ill-dressed,
inelegant woman.

Laura, to his lady, was but a kitchen wench;
Dido, a dowdy; Cleopatra, a gipsy; Helen and Hero, slanders and harlots. Shakespeare.

The bedlam train of lovers use
T' enhance the value, and the faults excuse;
And therefore 'tis no wonder if we see
They doat on dowdies and deformity. Dryden.

DO'WDY. adj. Awkward.

No housewifery the dowdy creature knew;
To sum up all, her tongue confess'd the shrew.
Gay.

away to bakers wives, and they have made boulters of them. Shakespeare.

DOWN. n. f. [duun, Danish.]

1. Soft feathers.

Virtue is the roughest way;
But proves at night a bed of down. Porter.
Leave, leave, fair bride! your solitary bed,
No more shall you return to it alone;
It nurseth sadness: and your body's print,
Like to a grave, the yielding down doth dint.
Danue.

We tumble on our down, and count the blessing.

Of a short minute's slumber. Denham.
A tender weakly constitution is very much owing to the use of down beds. Locke.

a hill.] A large open plain; properly
a flat on the top of a hill.

On the downs we see, near Wilton fair,
A hasten'd hare from greedy greyhound go.
Sidney.

Lord of much riches which the use renowns;
Seven thousand broad-tail'd sheep graze'd on his downs. Sandys.

Not all the fleecy wealth
That doth enrich those downs is worth a thought,
To this my errand, and the care it brought.
Milton.

Hills afford pleasant prospects; as they must needs acknowledge who have been on the downs of Suffex. Ray.

How Will-a-wisp misleads night-faring clowns
O'er hills, and sinking bogs, and pathless downs. Gay.

To compass this, his building is a town,
His pond an ocean, his parterre a down. Pope.
Down. prep. [aduna, Saxon.]

1. Along a descent; from a higher place to a lower.

Let go thy hold when a great wheel runs down hill, lest it break thy neck with following it; but the great one that goes upward, let him draw after. Shakespeare's King Lear.

A man falling down a precipice, though in motion, is not at liberty, because he cannot stop that motion if he would. Locke.

2. Toward the mouth of a river.

Mahomet put his chief substance into certain boats, to be conveyed down the river, as purposing to fly. Knutlee.

Down. adv. Not up.

1. On the ground; from the height at which any thing was to a lower situation.

Whom they hit, none on their feet might stand,
Though standing else as rocks; but down they fell

By thousands. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Down sinks the giant with a thundering sound,
His ponderous limbs oppress the trembling ground. Dryden.

2. Tending toward the ground.

Pull out th' usurping queen. Dryden.

2. A contemptuous threat.

Down, down to hell, and say I sent thee thither. Shakespeare.

Down. [To go.] To be digested; to be received.

If he be hungry more than wanton, bread alone will down; and if he be not hungry, 'tis not fit he should eat. Locke.

I know not how absurd this may seem to the masters of demonstration; and probably it will hardly down with any body, at first hearing. Locke.

To Down. v. a. [from the participle.] To knock; to subdue; to suppress; to conquer.

The hidden beauties seem'd in wait to lie,
To down proud hearts that would not willing die. Sidney.

Downcast. adj. [down and cast.] Bent down; directed to the ground.

Wanton languishing borrowed of her eyes the downcast look of modesty. Sidney.

My wily nurse by long experience found,
And first discover'd to my soul its wound;
'Tis love, said she; and then my downcast eyes,
And guilty dumbness, witness'd my surprise. Dryden.

Thy downcast looks, and thy disorder'd thoughts,

Tell me my fate: I ask not the success
My cause has found. Addison's Cato.

Downfall. n. f. [from down and fall.]

1. Ruin; calamity; fall from rank or state.

Why dost thou say king Richard is depos'd?
Darest thou, thou little better thing than earth,
Divine his downfall? Shakespeare.

We have seen some, by the ways by which they had designed to rise uncontrollably, to have directly procured their utter downfall. South.

2. A sudden fall, or body of things falling.

Each downfall of a flood the mountains pour
From their rich bowels, rolls a silver stream. Dryden.

3. Destruction of fabrics.

Not more aghast the matrons of renown,
When tyrant Nero burn'd th' imperial town,
Shriek'd for the downfall in a doleful cry,
For which their guiltless lords were doom'd to die. Dryden.

Downfallen. participial adj. [down and fall.] Ruined; fallen.

The land is now divorced by the downfallen steep cliffs on the farther side. Carew.

At the lowest of my downward thoughts, I pulled up my heart to remember, that nothing is achieved before it be thoroughly attempted, and that lying still doth never go forward. Sidney.

Downy. adj. [from down.]

1. Covered with down or nap.

By his gates of breath
There lies a downy feather, which aims not:
Did he suppose, that light and weightless down
Perforce must move. Shakespeare.

There be plants that have prickles, yet have downy or velvet rind upon their leaves, as stock-gillyflowers and coltsfoot; which down or nap consisteth of a subtle spirit, in a soft substance. Boron's Natural History.

DOZ

- In her hand she held
A bough of fairest fruit, that downy smil'd,
New gather'd, and ambrosial smell diffus'd. Milton.
1. Made of down or soft feathers.
A side breeze from westward waits their sails to fill,
And rests in those high beds his downy wings. Dryden.
Belinda still her downy pillow prest,
Her guardian sylph prolong'd the balmy rest. Pope.
3. Soft; tender; soothing.
Bunquo! Donalbain! Malcolm! awake!
Shake off this downy sleep, death's counterfeit,
And look on death itself. Shakespeare.
The night's companion kindly cheating them
Of all their cares, tam'd the rebellious eye
Of sorrow with a soft and downy hand,
Stealing all breaths in a lethargic band. Crawshaw.
- DO'WRE. } n. f. [douaire, Fr. It ought DO'WRY. } to be written dower.]

dable; dreaded.
Th' utmost sand-beach they shortly fetch,
Whilst the dread danger does behind remain. Fairy Queen.
- DRAFF. n. f. [dror, dirty, Saxon;
dras, Dutch, the sediment of ale.]
1. Refuse; lees; dregs: properly something fluid.
You would think I had a hundred and fifty tatter'd prodigals, lately come from swinekeep-ing, from eating dras and husks. Shakespeare.
'Twere simple fury, still thyself to waste
On such as have no taste;
To offer them a furze of pure bread
Whose appetite is dead!
No, give them grains their fill;
Husks, dras, to drink and swill. Ben Jonson.
I call'd and drew them thither,
My hell-hounds to lick up the dras and filth,
Which man's polluting sin with taint had shed
On what was pure. Milton.
Here rather let me drudge, and earn my bread,
Till vermin, or the dras of servile food, Consume me. Milton.

not only content to drag me at his chariot-wheels,
but he makes a show of me. Stillingfleet.
4. To pull about with violence and ignominy.
They shall surprise
The serpent, prince of air, and drag in chains
Through all his realm, and there confounded leave. Milton.
The constable was no sooner espied but he was reproach'd with disdainful words, beaten and dragged in so barbarous a manner, that he hardly escaped with his life. Clarendon.
5. To pull roughly and forcibly.
To fall, that's justice;
But then, to drag him after! For to die,
And yet in death to conquer, is my wish. Dryden.
In my fatal cause your sword was drawn;
The weight of my misfortunes dragg'd you down. Dryden.
- TO DRAG. v. n. To hang so low as to trail or grate upon the ground.
From hence are heard the groans of ghosts, the pains
Of sounding lashes, and of dragging chains. Dryden.
A door is said to drag, when, by its ill hanging on its hinges, the bottom edge of the door rides in its sweep upon the floor. Mason.
- DRA. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A net drawn along the bottom of the water.
Casting nets were spread in shallow brooks,
Drags in the deep, and baits were hung on nooks. Dryden.
The creatures are but instruments in God's hand: the returning our acknowledgments to them is just the same absurdity with theirs who burnt incense to the drag, and sacrificed to the net. Rogers.
2. An instrument with hooks to catch hold of things under water.
You may in the morning find it near to some fixed place, and then take it up with a drag hook or otherwise. Walton.

- DRA'GNET. n. f. [drag and net.] A net which is drawn along the bottom of the water.
Dragnets were made to fish within the deep,
And callignets did rivers bottoms sweep. Mary's Virgil.
Some fishermen, that had been out with a dragnet, and caught nothing, had a draught towards the evening, which put them in hope of a surgeon at last. L'Estrange.
One of our late great poets is sunk in his reputation, because he could never forgive any concert which came in his way, but swept, like a dragnet, great and small. Dryden.

Whatsoever old Time, with his huge dragnets, has conveyed down to us along the stream of ages, whether it be shells or shell-fish, jewels or pebbles, sticks or straws, seaweeds or mud, these are the ancients, these are the fathers. Watts.

DRA'GON. n. f. [draco, Latin; dragon, French.]

1. A kind of winged serpent, perhaps imaginary, much celebrated in the romances of the middle ages.

I go alone,
Like to a lonely dragon, that his fen
Makes fear'd and talk'd of more than seen. Shakespeare.

Swift, swift, you dragons of the night! that dawning

May hear the raven's eye. Shaksp. Cymbeline.
And you, ye dragons! of the scaly race,
Whom glittering gold and shining armours grace;
In other nations harmless are you found
Their guardian genii and protectors own'd. Rome.

On spiny volumes there a dragon rides;
Here, from our strict embrace, a stream he glides. Pope.

I'll raise such artificial sprights,
As by the strength of their illusion
Shall draw him on to his confusion. Shakespeare.
We have drawn them from the city. Yof.
Draw me not away with the wicked. Psalms.
Having the art, by empty promises and threats, to draw others to his purpose. Hayward.
The Spaniards, that were in the town, had so good memories of their losses, in their former battles, as the confidence of an army, which came for their deliverance, could not draw them forth again. Bacon's War with Spain.

29. To lead, as a motive.

Your way is shorter;
My purposes do draw me much about. Shakspeare.
Æneas wondering stood, then ask'd the cause
Whence to the stream the crowding people draws.
Dryden.

30. To persuade to follow.

I drew this gallant head of war,
And call'd these fiery spirits from the world
To outlook conquest. Shakspeare.

The poet
Did feign that Orpheus drew trees, stones, and flouds;
Since nought so stockish, hard, and full of rage,
But maulick, for the time, doth change his nature. Shakspeare.

31. To induce; to persuade.

The English lords did ally themselves with the Irish, and drew them in to dwell among them,
and gave their children to be fostered by them.
Davies.

Their beauty or unbecomingness are of more force to draw or deter their imitation than discourse. Locke.

32. To win; to gain: a metaphor from gaming.

This seems a fair deserving, and must draw me
That which my father loses. Shakspeare.

33. To receive; to take up: as, to draw money from the funds.

For thy three thousand ducats here is fix.—
—If every ducat in six thousand ducats
Were in six parts, and every part a ducat,
I would not draw them, I would have my bond.
Shakspeare.

34. To extort; to force.

So sad an object, and so well express'd,
Drew sighs and groans from the griev'd hero's breast. Dryden.

Can you o'er forget
The fond embraces, and repeated blessings,
Which you drew from him in your last farewell?
Addison.

35. To wrest; to distort.

I wish that both you and others would cease from drawing the scriptures to your fantasies and affections. Whitgift.

36. To compose; to form in writing: used of formulary or juridical writings.

In the mean time I will draw a bill of properties, such as our play wants. Shakspeare.
Clerk, draw a deed of gift. Shakspeare.
The report is not unartfully drawn, in the spirit of a pleader who can find the most plausible topics. Swift.
Shall Ward draw contracts with a statesman's skill? Pope.

37. To withdraw from judicial notice.

Go, wash thy face, and draw thy action:
come, thou must not be in this humour with me.
Shakspeare.

38. To viscerate; to embowel.

In private draw your poultry, clean your tripe,
And from your eels their slimy substance wipe.
King.

39. To DRAW in. To apply to any purpose by distortion or violence.

A dispute, where every little straw is laid hold on, and every thing that can but be drawn in any way, to give colour to the argument, is advanced with ostentation. Locke.

40. To DRAW in. To contract; to pull back.

Now, sporting muse, draw in the flowing reins;
Leave the clear streams awhile for sunny plains.
Gay.

41. To DRAW in. To inveigle; to entice.

Have they invented tones to wia
The women, and make them draw in
The men, as Indians with a female Tame elephant inveigle the male? Hudibras.
It was the prostitute faith of faithless miscreants that drew them in, and deceived them.
Smith.

42. To DRAW off. To extract by distillation.

Authors, who have thus drawn off the spirits of their thoughts, should be still for some time, till their minds have gathered froth strength, and by reading, reflection, and conversation, laid in a new stock of elegancies, sentiments, and images of nature. Addison's Freeholder.

43. To DRAW off. To drain out by a vent.

Stop your vessel, and have a little vent-hole stop'd with a spill, which never allow to be pulled out till you draw off a great quantity.
Mortimer's Husbandry.

44. To DRAW off. To withdraw; to abstract.

It draws men's minds off from the bitterness of party. Addison.

45. To DRAW on. To occasion; to invite.

Under colour of war, which either his negligence drew on, or his practices procured, he believed a subsidy. Hayward.

46. To DRAW on. To cause; to bring by degrees.

The examination of the subtle matter would draw on the consideration of the nice controversies that perplex philosophers. Boyle on Fluids.

47. To DRAW over. To raise in a still.

I took rectified oil of vitriol, and by degrees mixed with it essential oil of wormwood, drawn over with water in a limbeck. Boyle on Colours.

48. To DRAW over. To persuade to re- volt; to induce to change a party.

Some might be brought into his interests by money, others drawn over by fear. Addison.
One of differing sentiments would have drawn Luther over to his party. Atterbury.

49. To DRAW out. To protract; to lengthen.

He must not only die the death,
But thy unkindness shall his death draw out
To ling'ring sufferance. Shakspeare.

50. To DRAW out. To beat out, as is done to hot iron.

Beat a piece of iron out, or, as workmen
call it, draw it out, till it comes to its breadth.
Marm.

Virgil has drawn out the rules of tillage and planting into two books, which Hesiod has dispatched in half a one. Addison.

51. To DRAW out. To extract; to pump out by insinuation.

Philoctetes found her, and, to draw out more,
said she, I have often wondered how such excellencies could be. Sidney.

52. To DRAW out. To induce by motive.

Whereas it is concluded, that the retaining diverse things in the church of England, which other reformed churches have cast out, must needs argue that we do not well, unless we can show that they have done ill: What needed this wrest to draw out from us an accusation of so-foreign churches? Hudibras.

53. To DRAW out. To call to action; to detach for service; to range.

Draw out a file, pick man by man,
Such who dare die, and dear will sell their death.
Dryden.

Next of his men and ships he makes review,
Draws out the best and ablest of the crew.
Dryden's Æneid.

54. To DRAW out. To range in battle.

Let him desire his superior officer, that, the next time he is drawn out, the challenger may be posted near him. Collier.

DRA

They should keep a watch upon the particular bias in their minds, that it may not draw too much. Addison's Spectator.

3. To contract; to shrink.

I have not yet found certainly, that the water itself, by mixture of ashes, or dust, will shrink or draw into less room. Bacon.

4. To advance; to move; to make progression any way.

You were, Jupiter, a swan, for the love of Leda: Oh, omnipotent love! how near the god drew to the complication of a goose. Shakspeare.

Draw ye near hither all the chief of the people. 1 Samuel.

He ceded; and th' archangel soon drew nigh,
Not in his shape celestial, but as man Clad to meet man. Milton's Par. Lost.

They returned to the camp where the king was, and the Scots drew a little back to a more convenient post for their residence. Clarendon.

Ambitious meteors! how willing they are to set themselves upon the wing, taking every occasion of drawing upward to the sun. Dryden.

Now nearer to the Stygian lake they draw,
Whom from the shore the surly boatmen saw,
Observ'd their passage through the shady wood,
And mark'd their near approaches to the flood. Dryden.

And now I faint with grief; my fate draws nigh,

In all the pride of blooming youth I die. Addison's Ovid.

5. To draw together; to be collected; to come together.

They muster there, and round the centre swarm,

And draw together in a globe form. Blackmore.

6. To draw a sword.

For his sake
Did I expose myself, pure; for his love
Drew to defend him, when he was beset. Shakspeare.

7. To practise the art of delineation.

So much insight into perspective, and skill in drawing, as will enable him to represent tolerably on paper, any thing he sees, should be got. Locke.

8. To take a card out of the pack; to take a lot.

He has drawn a black, and smiles. Dryden.

9. To make a fore run by attraction.

10. To DRAW off. To retire; to retreat.

11. To DRAW on. To advance; to approach.

The fatal day draws on, when I must fall. Dryden.

12. To DRAW up. To form troops into regular order.

DRA

The lord Bernard, with the king's troops, seeing there was no enemy left on that side, drew up in a large field opposite to the bridge. Clarendon.

13. To DRAW retains, through all its varieties of use, some shade of its original meaning, to pull. It expresses an action gradual or continuous, and leisurely. Thus we forge a sword by blows, but we draw it by a continued line. We pour liquor quick, but we draw it in a continued stream. We force compliance by threats, but we draw it by gradual prevalence. We write a letter with whatever haste, but we draw a bill with slow scrupulosity.

DRAW. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The act of drawing.

2. The lot or chance drawn.

DRAWBACK. n. f. [draw and back.]

Money paid back for ready payment, or any other reason.

In poundage and drawbacks I lose half my rent;
Whatever they give me, I must be content. Swift.

DRAWBRIDGE. n. f. [draw and bridge.]

A bridge made to be lifted up, to hinder or admit communication at pleasure.

Half the buildings were raised on the continent, and the other half on an island, continued together by a drawbridge. Carew.

DRA'YFLOUGH. n. f. [dray and plough.] A plough of a particular kind.

The drayplough is the best plough in winter for mixt clays. Mortimer's Husbandry.

DRA'ZEL. n. f. [perhaps corrupted from drossel, the scum or dross of human nature; or from drosselle, French, a whore.] A low, mean, worthless wretch.

As the devil uses watches,
To be theinically for a space,
That, when the time's expired, the drazels
For ever may become his vassals. Hudibras.

DREAD. n. f. [drad, Saxon.]

1. Fear; terror; affright; horreur either felt or impressed.

D R E

Think'st thou that duty shall have dread to speak,
When pow'r to flattery bows? To plainness honour

Is bound, when majesty to folly falls. Shaksp.
Let not thy dread make me afraid. Job
Was ever any wicked man free from the stings
Of a guilty conscience, from the secret dread of divine displeasure, and of the vengeance of another world? Tillotson

If our fears can be awakened with the dread of evil, he has armed his laws with the terror of eternal misery. Rogers

2. Habitual fear; awe.

The fear of you, and the dread of you, shall be upon every beast of the earth. Genesis

3. The person or thing feared; the cause of fear.

To thee of all our good the sacred spring;
To thee, our dearest dread; to thee, our softer king. Prior

DREAD, adj. [dyad, Saxon.]

1. Terrible; frightful.

That'er this tongue of mine,
That laid the sentence of dread banishment
On yond' proud man, should take it off again
With words of tooth! Shakspere

I cannot be, but thou hast murder'd him:
So should a murderer look, to dread, so grim. Shakspere

To be expos'd against the warring winds;
To stand against the deep dread bolted thunder. Shakspere

Terrour seiz'd the rebel host,
When, coming towards them, to dread they saw
The bottom of the mountains upward turn'd. Milton

2. Awful; venerable in the highest degree.

Thou, attended gloriously from heav'n,
Shalt in the sky appear, and from thee send
The summoning archangels to proclaim Thy dread tribunal. Milton's Paradise Lost

From this descent
Celestial virtues rising, will appear
More glorious and more dread than from no fall. Milton

3. This seems to be the meaning of that controverted phrase, dread majesty. Some of the old acts of parliament are said in the preface to be metuendissimi regis, our dread sovereign's.To DREAD, v. a. [from the noun.] To fear in an excessive degree.

You may despise that which terrifies others,
and which yet all, even those who most dread it, must in a little time encounter. Wake

To DREAD, v. n. To be in fear.

Dread not, neither be afraid of them. Deut

Is dreadful as thy hate. Granville

2. Awful; venerable.

How dreadful is this place! Genesis

DREADFULLY, adv. [from dreadful.]

Terribly; frightfully.

Not sharp revenge, nor hell itself, can find
A fiercer torment than a guilty mind,
Which day and night doth dreadfully accuse,
Condemns the wretch, and still the charge renews. Dryden

DREADFULNESS, n. f. [from dreadful.]

Terribleness; frightfulness.

It may justly serve for matter of extreme terror to the wicked, whether they regard the dreadfulness of the day in which they shall be tried, or the quality of the judge by whom they are to be tried. Hakewell on Providence

DREADLESSNESS, n. f. [from dreadless.]

Fearlessness; intrepidity; undauntedness.

Z. Imamo, to whom danger then was a cause of *dreadless*ness, all the composition of her elements being nothing but fiery, with swiftness of desire crossed him. Sedley

DREADLESS, adj. [from dread.] Fearless; unafrighted; intrepid; unshaken;

undaunted; free from terror.

Dreadless, said he, that shall I soon declare;
It was complain'd, that thou hadst done great tort Unto an aged woman. Fairy Queen

All night the dreadless angel, unpursued,
Through heav'n's wide champaign held his way. Milton

DREAM, n. f. [droom, Dutch. This word is derived by Merie Casaubon, with more ingenuity than truth, from dreama tu &c, the comedy of life; dreams being, as plays are, a representation of something which does not really happen.

This conceit Junius has enlarged by quoting an epigram:

Σαπνὸν οὐκ ἔστι καὶ οὐκ ἔστιν ἡ μάστις
οὐδ' ὄντιν.
Τὸ οὐδὲν, μὴταυτὸν, ἢ φῆσι τὰς ὀνείρας.
Antbol.

1. A phantasm of sleep; the thoughts of a sleeping man.

We eat our meat in fear, and sleep
In the affliction of those terrible dreams
That shake us nightly. Shakspere's Macbeth
In dreams they fearful precipices tread;
Or, shipwreck'd, labour to some distant shore. Dryden

Glorious dreams stand ready to restore
The pleasing shapes of all you saw before. Dryd.

2. An idle fancy; a wild conceit; a groundless suspicion.

Let him keep
A hundred knights; yes, that on ev'ry dream,
Each box, each fancy, each complaint, dislike,
He may enguard his cottage. Shakspere

To DREAM, v. n. preter. dreamed, or dreamt. [from the noun.]

1. To have the representation of something in sleep.

Dreaming is the having of ideas, whilst the outward senses are stopped, not suggested by any external objects, or known occasion, nor under the rule or conduct of the understanding. Locke I dreamed that I was conveyed into a wide and boundless plain. Tutler

2. It has of before the noun.

I have long dream'd of such a kind of man,
But, being awake, I do despise my dream. Shakspere

I have nightly since
Dream'd of encounters 'twixt thyself and me:
We have been dizen together in my sleep,
Unbuckling in hugs, sliding each other's throat,
And wak'd half dead with nothing. Shakspere

3. To think; to imagine.

These boys know little they are sons to th' king,
Nor Cymbeline dreams that they are alive. Shak.
He never dreamed of the deluge, nor thought that first orb more than a transient crust. Burnet
He little dream'd how nigh he was to care,
Till treach'rous fortune caught him in the snare. Dryden

4. To think idly.

They dream on in a constant course of reading, but not digesting. Locke

I began to dream of nothing less than the immortality of my work. Swift

5. To be sluggish; to idle.

Why does Anthony dream out his hours,
And tempts not fortune for an able day? Dryden

To DREAM, v. a. To see in a dream.

The Macedon, by Jove's decree,
Was taught to dream an heir for Ptolemy. Dryd.
At length in sleep their bodies they compute,
And dream the future fight, and early role. Dryden

DREAMER, n. f. [from dream.]

1. One who has dreams; one who has fancies in his sleep.

The vision laid, and vanish'd from his sight,
The dreamer wak'd in a mortal fright. Dryd.
If our dreamer pleases to try whether the glowing heat of a glass furnace be barely a wandering imagination in a drowsy man's fancy, by putting his head into it, he may perhaps be awakened into a certainty. Locke

2. An idle fanciful man; a visionary.

Sometime he angers me
With telling of the moldwarp and the ant,
Of dreamer Merlin, and his prophecies. Shaksp.

3. A mope; a man lost in wild imagination; a reverie.

The man of sense his meat devours,
But only smells the peel and flow'rs;
And he must be an idle dreamer,
Who leaves the pie and gnaws the streamer. Prior

4. A sluggard; an idler.

DREAMLESS, adj. [from dream.] Free from dreams.

The savages of Mount Atlas, in Barbary, were reported to be both nameless and dreamless.
Camden's Remains

DREAR, n. f. Dread; terror.

The ill-fac'd owl, death's dreadful messenger,
The hoarse night raven, trump of doleful drear. Spenser

DREAR, adj. [dreonig, Saxon, dreary.]

Mournful; dismal; sorrowful.

In urns and altars round,
A drear and dying found Affrights the flames at their service quaint. Milton

DREARHEAD, n. f. [from dreary.] Horrorous; dismalness: a word now no longer in use.

That shortly from the shape of womanhood,
Such as she was when Pallas she attempted,
She grew to hideous shape of drearhead,
Pined with grief of folly late repented. Spenser

DREARIMENT, n. f. [from dreary.] This word is now obsolete.

1. Sorrow; dismalness; melancholy.

I teach the woods and waters to lament
Your doleful dreariment. Spenser's Epithalamium

2. Horror; dread; terror.

Almighty Jove, in wrathful mood,
To wreak the guilt of mortal sins is bent;
Hurls forth his thundering dart with deadly feud,
Inroll'd in flames and smouldring dreariment. Keats, Queen

DREARY, adj. [dreonig, Saxon.]

This word is scarcely used but in poetical diction.

1. Sorrowful; distressful.

The messenger of death, the ghastly owl,
With dreary thricks did alto yell;
And hungry wolves continually did howl
At her abhorred face, so horrid and so foul. Fairy Queen

2. Gloomy; dismal; horrid.

Obscure they went through dreary shades, that led
Along the vast dominions of the dead. Dryden

D R E

Towns, forests, herds, and men promiscuous chown'd;

With one great death deform the dreary ground.
Prior.

DREDGE. n. f. [To dretch, in Chaucer, is to delay; perhaps a net so often stopped may be called from this.] A kind of net.

For oysters they have a peculiar dredge; a thick, strong net, fastened to three spits of iron, and drawn at the boat's stern, gathering whatsoever it meets lying in the bottom. Carew.

To DREDGE. v. a. [from the noun.]
To gather with a dredge.

The oysters dredged in the Lyne find a welcome acceptance. Carew.

DREDGER. n. f. [from dredge.] One who fishes with a dredge.

DREGGINESS. n. f. [from dreggy.] Ful-ness of dregs or lees; foulness; mud-diness; feculence.

DREGGISH. adj. [from dregs.] Foul with lees; feculent.

To give a strong taste to this dreggy liquor,
they fling in an incredible deal of brown or hops, whereby small beer is rendered equal in mischief to strong. Harvey's Confections.

DREGGY. adj. [from dregs.] Containing dregs; consisting of dregs; muddy; feculent.

These num'rous veins, such is the curious frame,
Receive the pure insinuating stream;
But no corrupt or dreggy parts admit,
To form the blood or feed the limbs unfit.

Ripe grapes being moderately pressed, their juice may, without much dreggy matter, be squeezed out. Boyle.

DREGS. n. f. [Drehtzen, Saxon; dreggiam, Islandick.]

1. The sediment of liquors; the lees;
the grounds; the feculence.

Fain would we make him author of the wine,
If for the dregs we could find some other blame. Davis.
They often tread destruction's horrid path,
And drink the dregs of the revenger's wrath.

We from the dregs of life think to receive
What the first sprightly running could not give.
Dryden.

Such run on poets in a raging vein,
Ev'n to the dregs and squeezings of the brain.

2. Any thing by which purity is corrupted.

The king by this journey purged a little the dregs and leaven of the northern people, that were before in no good affections towards him. Bacon.

3. Dregs; sweepings; refuse.

Heav'n's favourite thou, for better fates design'd

Than we, the dregs and rubbish of mankind. Dryd.

What diffidence we must be under whether God will regard our sacrifice, when we have nothing to offer him but the dregs and refuse of life, the days of toasting and satiety, and the years in which we have no pleasure. Rever.

To DRAIN. v. n. [See DRAIN.] To empty. The same with drain: spelt differently perhaps by chance.

She is the sluice of her lady's secrets: 'tis but setting her mill a-going, and I can drain her of them all.

'Tis drain'd and emptied of its poison now;
A cordial draught. Southern.

To DRENCH. v. a. [Dnencan, Saxon.]

1. To wash; to soak; to steep.

Our garments being as they were drenched in the sea, hold notwithstanding their freshness and glides. Shakspeare.

To dry deep thoughts learn with me to drench
In mirth, that after no repenting draws. Milton.

VOL. I.

D R E

Now dam the ditches, and the floods refrain;
Their moisture has already drench'd the plain.

Dryden.

2. To saturate with drink or moisture:
in an ill sense.

In swinish sleep

Their drenched natures lie, as in a death. Shakspeare.

Too oft, alas! has mutual hatred drench'd

Our swords in native blood. Philips.

3. To physick by violence.

If any of your cattle are infected, speedily let both sick and well bleed, and drench them.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

DRENCH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A draught; a swill: by way of abhorrence or contempt.

Let such bethink them, if the sleepy drench
Of that forgetful lake benumb not still,
That in our proper motion we ascend. Milton.

2. Physick for a brute.

A drench is a potion or drink prepared for a sick horse, and composed of several drugs in a liquid form. Farriner's Dictionary.

Hansy, says she, how many hast thou kill'd to-day? Give my roan horse a drench, says he;
and answer, fourteen, an hour after. Shakspeare.

A drench of wine has with success been us'd,
And through a horse the generous juice infus'd.

Dryden.

3. Physick that must be given by violence.

Their counsels are more like a drench that must be pouted down, than a draught which must be leisurely drank if I liked it. King Charles.

4. A channel of water.

DRENCHER. n. f. [from drench.]

1. One that dips or sleeps any thing.

2. One that gives physick by force. Dis.

DRENT. participle. Probably corrupted from drenched, to make a proverbial rhyme to brent, or burnt.

see

In danger rather to be drent than brent?

Fairy Queen.

To DRESS. v. a. [dresser, French.]

1. To clothe; to invest with clothes.

The first request

He made, was, like his brothers to be dress'd;
And, as his birth requir'd, above the rest.

Dryden.

2. To clothe pompously or elegantly. It is used with up and out to enforce it.

Look upon pleasures not upon that side that is next the sun, or where they look beautifully:
that is, as they come towards you to be enjoyed;
for then they paint and smile, and dress themselves up in tinsel, and glass gems, and counterfeit imagery. Taylor.

Few admir'd the native red and white,
Till poets dress'd them up to charm the sight.

Dryden.

Lollia Paulina wore, in jewels, when dress'd out, the value of three hundred twenty-two thousand nine hundred and sixteen pounds thirteen shillings and four-pence. Arbuthnot.

3. To adorn; to deck; to embellish; to furnish.

Where was a fine room in the middle of the house, handsomely dress'd up, for the commissioners to sit in. Clarendon.

Skill is used in drifting up power with all the splendour absoluteness can add to it. Locke.

The mind loses its natural relish of real truth, and is reconciled intently to any thing that can be dress'd up into any faint appearance of it.

Locke.

4. To cover a wound with medicaments.

In time of my sickness another chirurgeon

5. To curry; to rub: a term of the

Adam! well may we labour still to dress

This garden; still to tend plant, tree, and flower. Aldrich.

Well must the ground be digg'd, and better

dress'd, Dryden.

New soil to make, and meliorate the rest.

8. To prepare for any purpose.

In Orkney they dress their leather with roots of tormentum instead of bark. Mortimer's Husbandry.

9. To trim; to fit any thing for ready use.

When he dresseth the lamps he shall learn incense. Leads.

When you dress your young hogs, cut away roots or spigs. Mortimer's Husbandry.

10. To prepare victuals for the table.

Thus the voluptuous youth, bred up to dress

For his fat grandfire some delicious meats,

In feeding high his tutor will surpass,

An heir apparent of the gourmand race. Dryden.

DRESS. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Clothes; garment; habit.

Dresses laugh'd at in our forefathers' wardrobes or pictures, when, by the circulation of time and vanity they are brought about, we think becoming. Governor of the Tongue.

A robe obscene was o'er his shoulders thrown,
A dress by fates and furies worn alone.

Pop's Statius.

2. Splendid clothes; habit of ceremony.

Full dress creates dignity, augments consciousness, and keeps at distance an encroacher.

Clarissa.

3. The skill of adjusting dress.

The men of pleasure, dress, and gallantry.

Pope.

DRESSER. n. f. [from dress.]

1. One employed in putting on the clothes and adorning the person of another.

She hurries all her hand-maids to the task;
Her head alone will twenty dressers ask. Dryden.

ming, or adjusting any thing.

And he unto the dresser of his vineyard, Behold, these three years I come seeking fruit on this fig-tree, and find none. Luke.

3. The bench in a kitchen on which meat is dress'd or prepared for the table.

'Tis burnt, and to is all the meat:

What dogs are these! Where is the rascal cook?

How durst you, villains! bring it from the dresser, Shakspeare.

And serve it thus to me that love it not?

A maple dresser in her tail she had,

On which full many a slender meal she made.

Dryden.

When you take down dishes, tip a dozen upon the dresser. Swift's Directions to the Cook.

DRESSING. n. f. [from dress.] The application made to a sore.

The second day after we took off the dressing, and found an eschar made by the cathartic.

Wifeman on Tumours.

In flow'ry wreaths the royal virgin drest
His bending horns, and kindly clapt his breast.
Childs.

To DRIB. v. a. [contracted from dribble.] To crop; to cut off; to defalcate. A cant word.

Merchants gains come short of half the mart;
For he who drives their bargains *drib*s a part.
Dryden.

To DRIBBLE. v. n. [This word seems to have come from drop by successive alterations, such as are usual in living languages: drop, drip, driple, dribble, thence driuel and drieller. Drip may indeed be the original word, from the Danish drypp.]

1. To fall in drops.

Seminar processes on the surface owe their form to the dribbling of water that passed over it.
Wetward on Fells.

A dribbling, difficulty, and a momentary suppression of urine, may be caused by the stone's shutting up the orifice of the bladder. Arbutnot.

2. To fall weakly and slowly.

Believe not that the dribbling dart of love
Can pierce a complete bottom. Shakespeare.

and dribble it all the way up stairs. Swift.

DRIBLET. n. f. [from dribble.] A small sum; odd money in a sum.

Twelve long years of exile borne,
Twice twelve we number'd since his bliss return;
So strictly wert thou just to pay,
Even to the dribble of a day. Dryden.

DRIER. n. f. [from dry.] That which has the quality of absorbing moisture; a desiccative.

There is a tale, that boiling of dairy roots in milk, which it is certain are great driers, will make dogs little. Bacon.

DRIFT. n. f. [from drive.]

1. Force impellent; impulse; overbearing influence.

A man being under the drift of any passion, will still follow the impulse of it till something interpose, and, by a stronger impulse, turn him another way. South.

2. Violence; course.

The mighty trunk, half rent with rugged rift,
Doth roll adown the rocks, and fall with fearful drift.
Fairy Queen.

3. Any thing driven at random.

Some hog, perhaps, upon the waters swam,
An useless drift, which rudely cut within,
And hollow'd, first a floating trough became,
And cross some riv'let passage did begin.
Dryden.

4. Any thing driven or born along in a body.

The ready racers stand;
Swift as on wings of wind upborne they fly,
And drifts of rising dust involve the sky.
Pope's Odyssey.

5. A storm; a shower.

Our thunder from the south
Shall rain their drift of bullets on this town.
Shakespeare.

6. A heap or stratum of any matter thrown together by the wind: as, a fast-drift, a deep body of snow.

7. Tendency or aim of action.
The particular drift of every act, proceeding eternally from God, we are not able to discern; and therefore cannot always give the proper and certain reason of his works. Hooker.

Their drift 'comes known and they discover'd

For some, of rainy, will be false of course.
Daniel.

8. Scope of a discourse.

The main drift of his book being to prove, that what is true is impossible to be false, he opposes nobody. Tillotson.

The drift of the pamphlet is to stir up our compassion towards the rebels. Addison.

This, by the title, the manner, and the drift, 'Twas thought could be the work of none but Swift. Swift.

She has bubbled him out of his youth: she drilled him on to five-and-fifty, and she will drop him in his old age. Childs.

5. To draw from step to step. A low phrase.

When by such insinuations they have once got within him, and are able to drill him on from one lewdness to another, by the same arts they corrupt and squeeze him. South.

6. To drain; to draw slowly. This sense wants better authority.

Drill'd through the sandy stratum every way,
The waters with the sandy stratum rise. Thomson.

7. To form to arms; to teach the military exercise. An old cant word.

The foe appear'd drawn up and drill'd,
Ready to charge them in the field. Hudibras.

DRILL. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. An instrument with which holes are bored. It is a point pressed hard against the thing bored, and turned round with a bow and string.

The way of tempering steel to make gravers, drills, and mechanical instruments, we have taught artificers. Boyle.

Drills are used for the making such holes as punches will not serve for; as a piece of work that hath already its shape, and must have an hole made in it. Moxon.

2. An ape; a baboon.

Shall the difference of hair be a mark of a different internal specifick constitution between a changeling and a drill, when they agree in shape and want of reason? Locke.

3. A small dribbling brook. This I have found no where else, and suspect it should be rill.

Springs through the pleasant meadows pour their drills,

Which snake-like glide between the bordering hills. Sandys.

Bacon.

The drinker and debauched person is the object of scorn and contempt.
South.

The urine of hard drinkers affords a liquor extremely fetid, but no inflammable spirit: what is inflammable stays in the blood, and affects the brain. Great drinkers commonly die apoplectic.
Arbutnot on Aliments.

TO DRIP. v. n. [dripping, Dutch.]

1. To fall in drops.

2. To have drops falling from it.

The soil, with fatt'ning moisture fill'd,
Is cloath'd with grass, and fruitful to be till'd;
Such as in fruitful vales we view from high,
Which dripping rocks, not rowling streams supply.
Dryden.

The finest sparks, and clearest beaux,
Drip from the shoulders to the toes.
Prior.

TO DRIP. v. a.

Contemns their labours, and the drivers cries.
The driver runs up to him immediately, and beats him almost to death.
The multitude or common rout, like a drove of sheep, or an herd of oxen, may be managed by any noise or cry which their driver shall accustom them to.

3. One who drives a carriage.

Not the fierce driver with more fury lends
The sounding lash, and, ere the stroke descends,
Low to the wheels his pliant body bends.

To DRIZZLE. v. a. [drifelen, German, to shed dew.] To shed in small flow drops, as winter rains.

When the sun sets, the air doth drizzle dew.
Though now this face of mine be hid
In sap-consuming winter's drizzled snow,
And all the conduits of my blood froze up,
Yet hath my night of life some memory.

To DRIZZLE. v. n. To fall in short flow drops.

And drizzling drops that often dorend,
The firmest flint doth in continuance wear.
Her heart did melt in great compassion,
And drizzling tears did shed for pure affection.

This day will pour down,
If I conjecture aught, no drizzling show'r,
But rattling storm of arrows barb'd with fire.
The neighbouring mountains, by reason of their height, are more exposed to the dews and drizzling rains than any of the adjacent parts.

DRIZZLY. adj. [from drizzle.] Shedding small rain.

This during winter's drizzly reign be done,
Till the new ram receives th' exalted fun.

DROIL. n. f. [by Junius understood a contraction of drivel.] A drone; a sluggard.

To DROIL. v. n. To work sluggishly and slowly; to plod.

Let such vile vassals, born to base vocation,
Drudge in the world, and for their living drail,
Which have no wit to live without entoye.

Defectude does contract and narrow our faculties, so that we can apprehend only those things in which we are conversant: the drailing peasant scarce thinks there is any world beyond the neighbouring markets.

DROLL. n. f. [droler, French.]

1. One whose business is to raise mirth by petty tricks; a jester; a buffoon; a jackpudding.

As he was running home in all haste, a droll takes him up by the way.
Why, how now, Andrew? cries his brother
droll;
To-day's conceit, methinks, is something droll.

Democritus, dear droll! revisit earth,
And with our follies glut thy heighten'd mirth.

2. A farce; something exhibited to raise mirth.

Some as justly fame extols,
For lofty lines in Smithfield drolls.

DRO

To DROLL. v. n. [drole, French.] To jest; to play the buffoon.

Such august designs as inspire your inquiries, used to be decided by drolling fantasticks, that have only wit enough to make others and themselves ridiculous.

Men that will not be reasoned into their sense,
may yet be laughed or drolled into them.

Let virtuosos insult and despise on, yet they never shall be able to droll away nature.

DROLLERY. n. f. [from droll.] Idle jokes; buffoonery.

They hang between heav'n and hell, borrow the chudians faith, and the atheists drollery upon it.

DROMEDARY. n. f. [dromedare, Italian.] A sort of camel, so called from its swiftness, because it is said to travel a hundred miles a-day.

Dromedaries are smaller than common camels, slenderer, and more nimble; and are of two kinds: one larger, with two small bunches, covered with hair, on its back; the other lesser,
with one hairy eminence, and more frequently called camel: both are capable of great fatigue.
Their hair is soft and downy: they have no hump and foreteeth, nor horn upon their feet; which are only covered with a fleshy skin; and they are about seven feet and a half high, from the ground to the top of their heads.

Straw for the horses and dromedaries brought they unto the place.

Mules, after these camels and dromedaries,
And waggons fraught with utensils of war

DRONE. n. f. [dröen, Saxon.]

1. The bee which makes no honey, and is therefore driven out by the rest.

The sad-eyed justice, with his surly hum,
Driv'ing o'er to executors pale
The lazy yawning drone.
Luxurious kings are to their people lost;
They live, like drones, upon the publick cost.

All, with united force, combine to drive
The lazy drone from the laborious hive.

2. A sluggard; an idler.

He sleeps by day
More than the wild cat: drones hive not with me,
Therefore I part with him.
Sit idle on the household hearth,
A burdensome drone, to visitants a gaze.
It is my misfortune to be married to a drone, who lives upon what I get, without bringing any thing into the common stock.

3. The hum, or instrument of humming.

Here, while his canting drone-pipe scan'd
The mystic figures of her hand,
He tipples palmistry, and dines
On all her fortune-telling lines.

To DRONE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To live in idleness; to dream.

What have I lost by my forefathers fault!
Why was not I the twentieth by descent
From a long relative race of droning kings?

2. To give a heavy dull tone.

Mellon and honeyuckles pound,
With these alluring favours threw the ground,
And mix with tinkling brass the cymbal's droning found.

DRO'NISH. adj. [from drone.] Idle; sluggish; dreaming; lazy; indolent; unactive.

The droonish monks, the scorn and shame of manhood,
Rouse and prepare once more to take possession,
To nestle in their ancient hives again.

To DROOP. v. n. [droef, sorrow, Dutch.]

1. To languish with sorrow.

- Conceiving the dishonour of his mother,
The straight decid'd, drop'd, took it deeply;
Faster'd and fix'd the thame on't in himself. Shak.
I drop, with struggling pent;
My thoughts are on my frowns bent. Sanby.
2. To faint; to grow weak; to be dispirited.

I find my zenith doth depend upon
A most auspicious star; whose influence
If now I court not, but omit, my fortunes
Will ever after drop. Shakespeare's Tempest.
Good things of day begin to drop and dawdle, While night's black agents to their prey do route. Shakespeare.
When by impulse from heav'n Tyrant's song,
In drooping soldiers a new courage sprung.
Roscommon.

Can flow'rs but drop in absence of the sun
Which wak'd their sweets? and mine, alas! is gone. Dryden.
Time seems not now beneath his years to drop,
Nor do his wings with sickly feathers drop.
Dryden.

When seditious rage to cruel exile drove
The queen of beauty and the court of love,
The muses droop'd with their forsaken arts.
Dryden.
I'll animate the soldiers drooping courage
With love of freedom and contempt of hire.
Addison's Cato

I saw him ten days before he died, and observed he began very much to drop and languish.
Swift.

3. To sink; to lean downward: commonly by weakness or grief.

I never from thy side henceforth must stray,
Where'er our day's work lies; though now enjoin'd
Laborious, till day drop. Milton's P. r. L. 3
His head, though gay,
Carnation, purple, azure, or speck'd with gold, Hung drooping, unsustain'd. Milton's P. r. L. 3
On her heav'd bosom hung her drooping head,
Which with a sigh she rais'd, and thus she said.
Pope.

DROP. n. f. [dnoppa, Saxon.]

1. A globule of moisture; as much liquor as falls at once when there is not a continual stream.

Meet we the medicine of our country's weal,
And with him pour we, in our country's purge,
Each drop of us. Shakespeare's Muchesh.
Whereas Aristotle tells us, that if a drop of wine be put into ten thousand measures of water, the wine, being overpowered by to vast a quantity of water, will be turned into it; he speaks very improbably. Boyle.

Admitting in the gloomy shade
Those little drops of light. Waller.
Had I but known that Sancho was his father,
I would have pour'd a deluge of my blood
To save one drop of his. Dryden's Span. Friar.

2. Diamond hanging in the ear.

The drops to thee, Brilante, we consign;
And, Monumentilla, let the watch be thine. Pope.

DROP SERENE. n. f. [gutta serena, Lat.]

A disease of the eye, proceeding from an inspissation of the humour.
Sotnick a drop serene hath quench'd their orbs,
Or dim suffusion veil'd! Milton's P. r. L. 3

To DROP. v. a. [dnoppa, Saxon.]

1. To pour in drops or single globules.

His heavens shall drop down dew. Deut.

2. To let fall.

Others o'er chimney tops and turrets row,
And drop their anchors on the meads below.
Dryden.

One only bag remain'd:
Propp'd on her trusty staff, not half upright,
And dropp'd an awkward court'ly to the knight.
Dryden.

St. John himself will scarce forbear,
To bite his pen and drop a tear. Swift.

3. To let go; to dismiss from the hand, or the possession.

Though I could
With barefac'd power sweep him from my sight,
And bid my will avouch it; yet I must not,
For certain friends that are both his and mine,
Whose loves I may not drop. Shakespeare.

Those who have assumed visible shapes for a season, can hardly be reckoned among this order of compounded beings; because they drop their bodies, and divest themselves of those visible shapes. Watts' Legick.

4. To utter slightly or casually.

Drop not thy word against the house of Isaac.
Amos.

5. To infer indirectly, or by way of digression.

St. Paul's epistles contain nothing but points of christian instruction, amongst which he seldom fails to drop in the great and distinguishing doctrines of our holy religion. Locke.

6. To intermit; to cease.

Where the act is unmanly or immoral, we ought to drop our hopes, or rather never entertain them. Collier on Despair.

After having given this judgment in its favour,
they suddenly drop the pursuit. Sharp's Surgery

7. To quit a master.

I have beat the hoof till I have worn out these shoes in your service, and not one penny left me to pay more; so that you must even excuse me if I drop you here. L'Estrange

8. To let go a dependant, or companion, without further association.

She drilled him on to five-and-fifty, and will drop him in his old age, if she can find her account in another. Addison.

They have no sooner fetched themselves up to the fashion of the polite world, but the town has dropped it em. Addison.

Mention either of the kings of Spain or Poland, and he talks notably; but if you go out of the Gazette, you drop him. Addison.

9. To suffer to vanish, or come to nothing.

Thus was the fame of our Saviour perpetuated by such records as would preserve the traditionary account of him to after-ages; and rectify it, if, by passing through several generations, it might drop any part that was material. Addison.

Opinions, like fashions, always descend from those of quality to the middle sort, and thence to the vulgar, where they are dropped and vanish.
Swift.

10. To bedrop; to speckle; to variegate with spots. Varis scillatus corpora guttis.

Or sporting, with quick glance,
Shew to the sun their wav'd coats, dropp'd with gold. Milton.

To DROP. v. n.

1. To fall in drops, or single globules.

The quality of mercy is not strain'd;
It droppeth as the gentle rain from heav'n
Upon the place beneath. Shakespeare.

2. To let drops fall; to discharge itself in drops.

The heavens dropped at the presence of God.
Isaiah.

While cumber'd with my dropping cloaths I lay,
The Ariel nation, covetous of prey,
Stain'd with my blood th' inhospitable coast.
Dryden's Lucid.

Beneath a rock he sigh'd alone,
And cold Lycarus wept from every dropping stone.
Dryden.

3. To fall; to come from a higher place.

Philosophers conjecture that you dropped from the moon, or one of the stars. Gulliver's Trav.
In every revolution, approaching nearer and nearer to the sun, this comet must at last drop into the sun's body. Chyene.

4. To fall spontaneously.

So mayst thou live, till, like ripe fruit, thou drop

Into thy mother's lap; or be with ease
Gather'd, not harshly pluck'd. Milton.

5. To fall in death; to die suddenly.

It was your presumptuous,
That in the dote of blows your son might drop.
Shakespeare.

6. To die.

Nothing, says Seneca, so soon reconciles us to the thoughts of our own death, as the prospect of one friend after another dropping round us.
Digby to Pope.

7. To sink into silence; to vanish; to come to nothing: a familiar phrase.

Virgil's friends thought fit to let drop this incident of Helen. Addison's Travels.
I heard of threats occasioned by my verses: I sent to acquaint them where I was to be found,
and so it dropped. Pope.

8. To come unexpectedly.

Either you come not here, or, as you grace
Some old acquaintance, drop into the place,
Careless and quailish, with a yawning face.
Dryden.

He could never make any figure in company,
but by giving disturbance at his entry: and therefore takes care to drop in when he thinks you are just seated. Spectator.

vasation of water lodged in the cells of the mem-

DROSS. n. f. [dnor, Saxon.]

1. The recrement or despumation of metals.

Some scumm'd the dross that from the metals came,

Some stirr'd the molten ore with ladles great,
And every one did twink, and every one did treat. Spenser.

Should the mixture of a little drofs constrain the church to deprive herself of so much gold, rather than learn how, by art and judgment, to make separation of the one from the other? Hooker.

2. Rust; incrustation upon metal.

An emperor, hid under a crust of drofs, after cleansing, has appeared with all his titles fresh and beautiful. Addison.

3. Refuse; leavings; sweepings; any thing remaining after the removal of the better part; dregs; feculence; corruption.

Fair proud, now tell me why should fair be proud,

Sith all world's glory is but drofs unclean;
And in the shade of death itself shall throud,
However now thereof ye little ween? Spenser.

That most divine light only shineth on those minds which are purged from all worldly drofs and human uncleannesses. Raleigh.

All treasures and all gain esteem as drofs,
And dignities and powers, all but the highest. Milton.

Such precepts exceedingly dispose us to piety and religion, by purifying our souls from the drofs and filth of sensual delights. Tillotson.

DRO'SINESS. n. f. [from droffy.] Foulness; feculence; rust.

2. Worthless; foul; feculent.

Your intention hold,
As fire these droffy thymes to purify,
Or as chair to change them into gold. Dante.

DRO'TCHEL. n. f. [corrupted perhaps from dretschel. To dretsch, in Chaucer, is to idle, to delay. Droch, in Frisick, is delay.] An idle wench; a sluggard. In Scottish it is still used.

DROVE. n. f. [from drive.]

1. A body or number of cattle: generally used of oxen or black-cattle.

They brought to their stations many drives of cattle; and within a few days were brought out of the country two thousand muttons. Hayward.

A Spaniard is unacquainted with our northern drives. Brown.

2. A number of sheep driven. To an herd of oxen we regularly oppose, not a drive, but a flock, of sheep.

A drive of sheep, or an herd of oxen, may be managed by any noise or cry which the drivers shall accustom them to. South.

3. Any collection of animals.

The founts and seas, with all their finny drive,
Now to the moon in wavering murice move. Milton.

4. A crowd; a tumult.

But if to fame alone thou dost pretend,
The miser will his empty palace lend,
Set wide with doors, adorn'd with plated brass,
Where drives, as at a city-gate, may pass. Dryden's Journal.

DRO'VEN. part. from drive. Not now used.

This is sought indeed;
Had we so done at first, we had droven them home
With clouts about their heads. Shakespeare.

DRO'VER. n. f. [from drive.] One that fays oxen for sale, and drives them to market.

The prince hath got your hero.

—I with him joy of her.

—Why, that's spoken like an honest drover; so they fell bullocks. Shakespeare.

The drover who his fellow drover meets

In narrow passages of winding streets. Dryden.

DROUGHT. n. f. [brugobe, Saxon.]

1. Dry weather; want of rain.

O earth! I will befriend thee more with rain
Than youthful April shall with all his showers:
In summer's drought I'll drop upon thee fill. Shakespeare.

Great droughts in summer, lasting till the end of August, some gentle showers upon them, and then some dry weather, portend a pestilent summer the year following. Bacon.

To south the Persian bay,
And inaccessible th' Arabian drought. Milton.
As torrents in the drowth of summer fail,
So perish'd man from death shall never rise. Sandy.

They were so learned in natural philosophy, that they foretold earthquakes and storms, great droughts, and great plagues. Temple.
In a drought, the thirsty creatures cry,
And gape upon the gather'd clouds for rain. Dryden.

Upon a shower, after a drought, earthworms and land-snails innumerable come out of their lurking-places. Ray.

2. Thirst; want of drink.

His carcase, pinn'd with hunger and with drought. Milton.
One, whose drought
Yet scarce allay'd, still eyes the current stream, Whose liquid murmur heard new thirst excites. Milton.

DROUGHTINESS. n. f. [from droughty.]

The state of wanting rain.

DROUGHTY. adj. [from drought.]

1. Wanting rain; sultry.

That a camel, so patient of long thirst, should be bred in such droughty and parched countries, where it is of such eminent use for travelling over those dry and sandy deserts where no water is to be had, must be acknowledged an act of providence and design. Ray on Creation.

2. Thirsty; dry with thirst.

If the former years Exhibit no supplies, alas! thou must
With tasteless water wash thy droughty throat. Philips.

To DROWN. v. a. [from drunden, below, German, Skinner; from druncian, Sax. Lye.]

1. To suffocate in water.

They would soon drown those that refused to swim down the popular stream. King Charles.

doubt to have his doings drown'd in another man's praise. Spenser on Ireland.

That the brightests of the sun doth drown our discerning of the lesser lights, is a popular error. Wotton.

My private voice is drown'd amid the fenns. Addison.

Some aged man who lives this act to see,
And who in former times remember'd me,
May say, the sun, in fortitude and fame,
Outgives the mark, and drowns his father's name. Dryden.

To DROWN. v. n. To be suffocated in the waters.

There be, that keep them out of fire, and yet was never burned; that beware of water, and yet was never nigh drowning. Alford.

Method thought what pain it was to drown!
What dreadful noise of waters in my ears! Shakespeare.

To DROWSE. v. a. [drosen, Dutch.]

To make heavy with sleep.

There gentle sleep
First found me, and with soft oppression seiz'd
My drowsy senses uncontroll'd. Milton.

To DROWSE. v. n.

1. To slumber; to grow heavy with sleep.

All their shape
Spangled with eyes, more numerous than those
Of Argus; and more wakeful than to drowse, Charm'd with Arcadian pipe. Milton.

2. To look heavy, not cheerful.

They rather drow'd, and hung their eyelids down,
Slept in his face, and render'd such aspect
As cloudy men use to their adversaries. Shakespeare.

DROW'NED. n. f. Sleepiness; inclination to sleep. Obsolete.

The royal virgin shook off drown'd;
And rising forth out of her bower,
Look'd for her knight. Fairy Queen.

DROW'NELY. adv. [from drowsy.]

1. Sleepily; heavily; with an inclination to sleep.

The air swarms thick with wand'ring denies,
Which drowsily like humming beetles rise. Dryden.

2. Sluggishly; idly; slothfully; lazily.

We satisfy our understanding with the first things, and, thereby satiated, slothfully and drowsily sit down. Raleigh.

DRO'WSINESS. n. f. [from drowsy.]

1. Sleepiness; heaviness with sleep; disposition to sleep.

What a strange drowsiness possesses them! Shakespeare.

In deep of night, when drowsiness
Hath lock'd up mortal sense, then listen I
To the celestial Syren's harmony. Milton.

What succour can I hope the muse will lend,
Whose drowsiness hath wrong'd the muse's friend? Crayshaw.

He passes his whole life in a dozed condition, between sleeping and waking, with a kind of drowsiness and confusion upon his senses. South.
He that from his childhood has made rising betimes familiar to him, will not waste the best part of his life in drowsiness and lying a-bed. Lisle.

A sensation of drowsiness, oppression, and lassitude, are signs of a plentiful meal in young people. Arbuthnot.

2. Idleness; indolence; inactivity.

It falleth out well to shake off your drowsiness, for it seemed to be the trumpet of a war. Bacon.

DRO'WSY. adj. [from drowse.]

1. Sleepy; heavy with sleep; lethargick.

Drowsy am I, and yet can rarely sleep. Sidney.
Men drowsy, and desirous to sleep, or before the fit of an ague, do use to yawn and stretch. Bacon's Natural History.

The flowers, call'd out of their beds,
Start and raise up their drowsy heads. Georgian.

DRU

Drunk'n at last, and drowsy they depart
Each to his house. Dryden.
2. Heavy; lulling; causing sleep.
Sir Guyon, mindful of his vows ylight, Uprose from drowsy couch. Fairy Queen.
While thus he rested, on her arm reclin'd,
The hoary willows waving with the wind,
And feather'd quires that warbled in the shade,
And pulsing streams that through the meadow stray'd,
In drowsy murmurs lull'd the gentle maid.
Addison.

3. Stupid; dull.
Those inadvertencies, a body would think,
even our author, with all his drowsy reasoning,
could never have been capable of. Atterbury.
To DRUB. v. n. [druber, to kill, Dan.]
To thrash; to beat; to bang; to thump; to thwack; to cudgel. A word of contempt.
He that is valiant, and dares fight,
Though drubb'd, can win no honour by 't.
Hudibras.

The little thief had been soundly drubb'd with a good honest cudgel. L'Estrange.
Though the bread he not mine, yet, if it had been less than weight, I should have been drubb'd.
Locke.

DRUB. n. f. [from the verb.] A thump;
a knock; a blow.

The blows and drubs I have receiv'd
Have bruin'd my body, and bereav'd
My limbs of strength. Hudibras.
By setting an unfortunate mark on their followers, they have exposed them to innumerable drubs and confusions. Addison.

To DRUDGE. v. n. [dreccan, to vex, Saxon; draghen, to carry, Dutch.] To labour in mean offices; to toil without honour or dignity; to work hard; to slave.

And to crack'd hiddle, and hoarse labour,
In meritment, did drudge and labour. Hudibras.
The poor sleep little: we must learn to watch
Our labours late, and early every morning, Midst winter frosts; then clad and fed with sparing,
Rise to our toils, and drudge away the day.
Ottaway.

Advantages obtained by industry, directed by philosophy, can never be expected from drudging ignorance. Glanville.

Soon he came to court,
Proffering for hire his service at the gate,
To drudge, draw water, and to run or wait.
Dryden.

I made no such bargain with you, to live always drudging. Dryden's Dedication, Aeneid.
What is an age, in dull renown drugg'd o'er!
One little single hour of love is more. Granville.

DRUDGES. n. f. [from the verb.] One employed in mean labour; a slave; one doomed to servile occupation.

To conclude, this drudge of the devil, this diviner, laid claim to me. Shakespeare.

He sits above and laughs the while
At thee, ordain'd his drudge, to execute Whate'er his writ shall bid. Milton.

Art thou our slave,
Our captive, at the publick mill our drudge,
And dar'st thou at our sending and command,
Dispute thy coming? Milton's Signifies.

He is content to be their drudge,
And on their errands gladly trudge. Hudibras.
The hard master makes men serve him for nought, who rewards his drudges and slaves with nothing but shame, and sorrow, and misery.
Titmisen.

DRUDGER. n. f. [from drudge.]

DRU

DRUDGERY. n. f. [from drudge.] Mean labour; ignoble toil; dishonourable work; servile occupation.

My old dame will be undone for one to do her husbandry and her drudgery. Shakespeare.

Were there not instruments for drudgery as well as offices of drudgery? Were there not people to receive orders, as well as others to give and authorize them? L'Estrange.

You do not know the heavy grievances,
The toils, the labours, weary drudgeries
Which they impose. Southern's Orosma.

To thee that drudgery of pow'r I give;
Caes be thy lot: reign thou, and let me live.
Dryden.

Paradise was a place of bliss, as well as immortality, without drudgery, and without sorrow.
Locke.

Even Drudgery himself,
As at the ear he sweats, or duly hews
The palace stone, looks gay. Thomson.

It is now handled by every dirty wench, and condemned to do her drudgery. Swift.

DRUDGINGBOX. n. f. [drudging and box.]
The box out of which flower is sprinkled upon roast meat.

But if it lies too long, the crackling's pall'd,
Not by the drudgingbox to be recul'd.
King's Cookery.

DRUDGINGLY. adv. [from drudging.]
Laboriously; toilsomely.

He does now all the meanest and triflingest things himself drudgingly, without making use of any inferior or subordinate minister. Ray.

DRUG. n. f. [drogue, French.]

1. An ingredient used in physick; a medicinal simple.

A fleet descried
Hangs in the clouds, by equinoctial winds
Close sailing from Bengala, or the illes
Of Ternate and Tidore, whence merchants bring Their spicy drugs. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Judicious physick's noble art to gain,
He drugs and plants explor'd, alas! in vain.
Smith.

Bright Helen mix'd a mirth-inspiring bowl,
Temper'd with drugs of lov'reign use, t' assuage
The boiling bofom of tumultuous rage. Pope.
In the names of drugs and plants, the mistake in a word may endanger life. Baker on Learning.

2. It is used sometimes for poison.

Mortal drugs I have; but Mantra's law
Is death to any he that utters them. Shakespeare.
And yet no doubts the poor man's draught control;

He dreads no poison in his homely bowl:
Then fear the deadly drug, when gems divine
Enchase the cup, and sparkle in the wine. Dryd.

3. Any thing without worth or value; any thing of which no purchaser can be found.

Each noble vice
Shall bear a price,
And virtue shall a drug become:
An empty name,
Was all her fame,
But now she shall be dumb. Dryden.

4. A drudge. This seems the meaning here.

He from his first swath proceeded
Till sweet degrees that this brief world affords,
To such as may the passive drugs of it Freely command. Shakespeare.

To DRUG. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To season with ingredients, commonly medicinal.

The fuscated groams
Do mock their charge with flowers.—I've drug'd their possetts,
That death and nature do contend about them.
Shakespeare.

2. To tincture with something offensive.

DRU

Of they assay'd,
Hunger and thirst constraining; drug'd as oft
With hatefullest disrelish, with'd their jaws
With foot and cinders fill'd. Milton.

DRUGGET. n. f. A slight kind of woollen stuff.

In drugget's dress, of thirteen pence a-yard,
See Philip's son amidst his Persian guard. Swift.

DRUGGIST. n. f. [from drug.] One who sells physical drugs.

Common nitre we bought at the druggist's.
Boyle.

DRUGSTER. n. f. [from drug.] One who sells physical simples.

Common oil of turpentine I bought at the drug ster's. Berke.
They set the clergy below their apothecaries, the physician of the soul below the druggers of the body. Atterbury.

DRUID. n. f. [derio, oaks, and bud, in-cantation.] A priest and philosopher of the ancient Britons.

DRUM. n. f. [tromme, Danish; drumme, Erse.]

1. An instrument of military music, consisting of vellum strained over a broad knop on each side, and beaten with sticks.

Let's march without the noise of threatening drums. Shakespeare.

In drums, the closeness round about, that preserveth the sound from dispersing, maketh the noise come forth at the drum-hole far more loud and strong than if you should strike upon the like skin extended in the open air. Bacon.

Tears trickling down their breasts bedew the ground,
And drums and trumpets mix their mournful sound. Dryden.

Now no more the drum
Provokes to arms, or trumpet's clangour shrill
Alights the wives, and chills the virgin's blood.
Philips.

2. The tympanum of the ear, or the membrane which perceives the vibration of the air.

To DRUM. v. n.

1. To beat a drum; to beat a tune on a drum.

2. To beat with a pulsatory motion.

Now, heart,
Set ope thy sluices, send the vigorous blood
Through every active limb for my relief;
Then take thy rest within the quiet cell,
For thou shalt drum no more. Dryden.

To DRUMBLE. v. n. To drone; to be suggish. Hammer.

Take up these cloths here quickly: where's the cowbell? Look, how you drumble! carry them to the landress in Datchet Mead. Shalsp.

DRUMFISH. n. f. The name of a fish.
The under-jaw of the drumfish from Virginia.
Woodsward.

DRUMMAJOR. n. f. [drum and major.]
The chief drummer of a regiment.

Such company may chance to spoil the swearing;
And the drummajor's oaths, of bulk untuly,
May dwindle to a feeble— Cleveland.

DRUMMAKER. n. f. [drum and maker.]
He who deals in drums.

The drummaker uses it, and the cabinetmaker.
Montmor.

DRUMMER. n. f. [from drum.] He whose office it is to beat the drum.

Drummer, strike up, and let us march away.
Shakespeare.

Here rows of drummers stand in martial file,
And with their vellum-thunder shake the pile.
Guy.

DRY

DRUMSTICK. n. f. [from drum and stick.] The stick with which a drum is beaten.

DRUNK. adj. [from drink.]

1. Intoxicated with strong liquor; inebriated.

This was the morn when sitting on the guard,
Drawn up in rank and file, they stood prepar'd
Of seeming arms to make a short assay;
Then hatten to be drunk, the business of the day.

We generally conclude that man drunk, who takes pains to be thought sober.

2. Drenched or saturated with moisture.

I will make mine arrow drunk with blood.

DRUNKARD. n. f. [from drunk.] One given to excessive use of strong liquors; one addicted to habitual ebriety.

Some blood drawn on me would beget opinion
Of my more fierce endeavour. I've been
Do more than this in sport.

My bowels cannot hide her woe,
But, like a drunkard, I must vomit them.
God will not take the drunkard's excuse, that he has so long accustomed himself to intemperate drinking, that now he cannot leave it off.

DRUNKEN. adj. [from drunk.]

1. Intoxicated with liquor; inebriated.

O monstrous heart! how like a swine he lies!
Sirs, I will practise on this drunken man.
Drunk men imagine every thing turneth sound: they imagine that things come upon them; they see not well things afar off; those things that they see near hand, they see out of their place, and sometimes they see things double.

2. Given to habitual ebriety.

3. Saturated with moisture.

Then let the earth be drunken with our blood.

4. Done in a state of inebriation.

When your carvers, or your waiting vassals,
Have done a drunken slaughter, and defac'd
The precious image of our dear Redeemer,
You straight are on your knees for pardon, pardon.

We should for honour take
The drunken quarrels of a rike.

DRUNKENLY. adv. [from drunken.] In a drunken manner.

My blood already, like the pelican,
Hast thou tap't out, and drunkenly carous'd.

DRUNKENNESS. n. f. [from drunken.]

1. Intoxication with strong liquor.

Every going off from our natural and common temper, and our usual severity of behaviour, is a degree of drunkenness.

2. Habitual ebriety.

The Lacedemonians trained up their children to hate drunkenness, by bringing a drunken man into their company.

3. Intoxication or inebriation of any kind; disorder of the faculties.

Passion is the drunkenness of the mind, and therefore in its present working, not controllable by reason.

DRY. adj. [orig. Saxon.]

1. Arid; not wet; not moist.

If the pipe be a little wet on the inside, it will make a differing sound from the same pipe dry.

When God said,
Be gather'd now, ye waters under heav'n,
Into one place, and let dry land appear!
Of turbid elements the sport;
From clear to cloudy toil, from hot to cold,
And dry to moist.

2. Not rainy.

DRY

A dry March and a dry May portend a wholesome summer, if there be a showering April between.

The weather, we agreed, was too dry for the feason.

3. Not succulent; not juicy.

I will drain him dry as lay;
Sleep shall neither right nor day
Hang upon his penitents lid;
He shall live a man forbid.

4. Being without tears.

Dry mourning will decay more deadly bring,
As a north wind burns a too forward spring;
Gave sorrow vent, and let the juices go.

5. Thirsty; arid.

So dry he was for fear.
Void of a bulky charge near their lips,
With which, in often interrupted sleep,
Their frying blood compels to irrigate
Their dry sun'd tongues.

6. Jeune; barren; plain; unembellished; without pathos; without flowers.

As we should take care that our stile in writing be neither dry nor empty, we should look again it be not winding or wanton with far-fetched descriptions: either is a vice.

It remaineth to treat concerning ornaments within or without the fabrick; a piece not so dry as the meet contemplation of proportions: and therefore I hope therein somewhat to refresh both the reader and myself.

That the fire burns by heat, is an empty dry return to the question, and leaves us still ignorant.

It is a dry fable, with little or nothing in it.

Authority and friendship work upon some, dry and sober reason works upon others.

To clear up this theory, I was willing to lay aside dry subtilties with which the schools are filled.

These epistles will become less dry, and more succupile of ornament.

7. Hard; severe. [drien anciently to endure; dree, Scottish.]

Of two noblemen, the one was given to scoff, but kept ever royal chess in his house; the other would ask of those that had been at his table, was there never a flout or dry blow given?

I rather hop'd I should no more
Hear from you o' th' gallanting score;
For hard dry bailings us'd to prove
The readiest remedies of love;
Next a dry diet.

TO DRY. v. a.

1. To free from moisture; to arefy; to exsiccate.

The meat was well, if you were so contented.
—I tell thee, Kate, 'twas burnt and dried away.

Heat dries bodies that do easily expue, as parchment, leaves, roots, and clay; and so doth time arefy.

Herbs and flowers, if they be dried in the shade, or dried in the hot sun a small time, keep best.

The running streams are deep:
See, they have caught the father of the flock,
Who dries his fleece upon the neighbouring rock.

2. To exhale moisture.

'Twas grief no more, or grief and rage were
one

Within her soul: at last 'twas rage alone;
Which, burning upwards in succession, dries
The tears that flood considering in her eyes.

3. To wipe away moisture.

Then with her vest the wound the wipes and dries.

See, at your blest returning,
Rage disappears;
The widow'd life in mourning
Dries up her tears.

DRY

4. To seorch with thirst.

Their honourable men are furnished, and their multitude dried up with thirst.

5. To drain; to exhaust.

Ruth Elpenor, in an evil hour,
Dried an immeasurable bowly, and thought
T' exhale his turfeit by triguous sleep,
Imprudent: him death's iron sleep oppress.

6. To DRY up. To deprive totally of moisture; to take all moisture away.

The water of the sea, which formerly covered it, was in time exhaled and dried up by the sun.

TO DRY. v. n. To grow dry; to lose moisture; to be drained of its moisture.

DRYER. n. f. [from dry.] That which has the quality of absorbing moisture.

The ill effects of drinking are relaxed by this plant, which is a great dryer and opener, especially by perspiration.

DRY'EYED. adj. [dry and eye.] Without tears; without weeping.

Sight to deform what heart of rock could long Dry-eyed behold? Adam could not, but wept.

DRY'LY. adv. [from dry.]

1. Without moisture.

2. Coldly; frigidly; without affection.

The archduke, conscious to himself how dry
the king had been used by his council, did strive to recover the king's affection.

Wouldst thou to honour and preferments climb,
Be bold in mischief, dare some mighty crime,
Which dungeons, death, or banishment defers;
For virtue is but dryly prais'd, and flaves.

3. Jejunely; barrenly; without ornament or embellishment.

Some dryly plain, without invention's aid,
Write dull receipts how poems may be made.

DRY'NESS. n. f. [from dry.]

1. Want of moisture; secicity.

The Africans are conceived to be peculiarly scorched and torried by the sun, by dryness of the soil, from want and defect of water.

Such was the discord which did not dispense Form, order, beauty, through the universe
While dryness moisture, coldness heat refills,
All that we have, and that we are, subsists.

The marrow supplies an oil for the innunction of the bones and ligaments in the articulation;
and particularly of the ligaments, preserving them from dryness and rigidity, and keeping them supple and flexible.

Is the sea ever likely to be evaporated by the sun, or to be emptied with buckets? Why then must we fancy this impossible dryness, and then, upon that fictitious account, calumniate nature?

2. Want of succulence.

If he fill'd
His vacancy with his voluptuousness,
Full surfeits, and the dryness of his bones,
Call on him for 't.

The difference of muscular flesh depends upon the hardness, tenderness, moisture, or dryness of the fibres.

3. Want of embellishment; want of pathos; jejuneness; barrenness.

Their new flowers and sweetness do as much corrupt as others dryness and aqualor, if they chose not carefully.

Be faithful where the author exerts, and paraphrase where penury of fancy or dryness of expression ask it.

4. Want of sensibility in devotion; want of ardour; aridity.

It may be, that by this dryness of spirit, God intends to make us the more fervent and resigned in our direct and solemn devotions, by the perceiving of our weakness. Taylor.

DRY-NURSE. n. f. [dry and nurse.]

1. A woman who brings up and feeds a child without the breast.

2. One who takes care of another: with some contempt of the person taken care of.

Mrs. Quickly is his nurse, or his drynurse, or his cook, or his laundry, his washer, and his wringer. Shakespeare.

TO DRY-NURSE. v. a. [from the noun.]

To feed without the breast.

As Romulus a wolf did rear,
So he was drynurs'd by a bear. Hudibras.

DRY-SHOE. adj. [dry and shoe.] Without wet feet; without treading above the shoes in the water.

He had embarked us in such disadvantage, as we could not return dryshod. Sidney.

Dryshod to pass, the parts the floods in tway;
And eke huge mountains from their native seat
She would command themselves to bear away. Fairy Queen.

Has honour's fountain then suck'd back the stream?
He has; and hooting boys may dryshod pass,
And gather pebbles from the naked ford. Dryden.

DUAL. adj. [dualis, Latin.] Expressing the number two.

Modern languages have only one variation, and so the Latin; but the Greek and Hebrew have one to signify two, and another to signify more than two: under one variation the noun is said to be of the dual number, and under the other, of the plural. Clarke's Latin Grammar.

TO DUB. v. a. [hubban zo rubene, Sax. addubba till riddara, Islandick, to dub a knight. Addubba, in its primary sense, signifies to strike, knights being made by a blow with the sword.]

1. To make a man a knight.

Knight, knight, good mother! Basilisco like.
What! I am dubb'd; I have it on my shoulder. Shakespeare.

The robes which the kings then allowed to each knight, when he was dubb'd, of green, or burnet, as they spake in that age, appeareth upon record. Camden's Remains.

The king stood up under his cloth of state, took the sword from the lord protector, and dubb'd the lord mayor of London knight. Hayward on Edward vi.

2. To confer any kind of dignity, or new character.

The jealous o'erborn widow and herself,
Since that our brother dubb'd them gentlewomen,
Are mighty goddesses in this monarchy. Shakespeare.

He
Gave thee no instance why thou shouldst do treason,
Unless to dub thee with the name of traitor. Shakespeare.

Women commence by Cupid's dart,
As a king hunting dubs a hart. Cleaveland.

A plain gentleman, of an ancient family, is of better quality than a new knight, though the reason of his dubbing was meritorious. Cotlier.

O poet! thou hadst been discreeter,
Hanging the monarch's hat so high,
If thou hadst dubb'd thy star a meteor,
That did but blaze, and rove, and die. Prior.

These demoniacs let me dub
With the name of legion club. Swift.

A man of wealth is dubb'd a man of worth;
Venus shall give him form, and Antis birth. Pope.

DUB. n. f. [from the verb.] A blow; a knock.

As skilful coopers hoop their tube

With Lydian and with Phrygian dubbs. Hudib.

DUBIOUSITY. n. f. [from dubious.] A thing doubtful. Not used.

Men often swallow falsties for truths, dubiousities for certainties, feasibilitys for possibilities, and things impossible for possible. Brown.

DUBIOUS. adj. [dubius, Latin.]

1. Doubting; not settled in an opinion.

2. Uncertain; that of which the truth is not fully known.

No quick reply to dubious questions make. Denham.

We also call it a dubious or doubtful proposition, when there are no arguments on either side. Watts' Logic.

3. Not plain; not clear.

Satan with less toil, and now with ease,
Wafts on the calmer wave, by dubious light. Milton.

4. Having the event uncertain.

His utmost pow'r with adverse pow'r oppos'd,
In dubious battle, on the plains of heav'n. Milton.

DUBIOUSLY. adv. [from dubious.] Uncertainly; without any determination.

Authors write often dubiously, even in matters wherein is expected a strict definitive truth. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Almanack makers wander in generals, and talk dubiously, and leave to the reader the business of interpreting. Swift.

DUBIOUSNESS. n. f. [from dubious.] Uncertainty; doubtfulness.

She speaks with dubiousness, not with the certainty of a goddess. Brown.

DUBIFABLE. adj. [dubito, Latin.] Doubtful; uncertain; what may be doubted.

DUBITATION. n. f. [dubitatio, Latin.] The act of doubting; doubt.

Many of the ancients denied the antipodes; but the experience of our enlarged navigation can now assert them beyond all dubitation. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Dubitation may be called a negative perception; that is, when I perceive that what I see is not what I would see. Crew.

DUCAL. adj. [from duke.] Pertaining to a duke: as, a ducal coronet.

DUCAT. n. f. [from duke.] A coin struck by dukes: in silver, valued at about four shillings and six pence; in gold, at nine shillings and six pence.

I cannot instantly raise up the grofs
Of full three thousand ducats. Shakespeare.

There was one that died in debt: it was reported, where his creditors were, that he was dead: one said, he hath carried ave hundred ducats of mine into the other world. Eden.

DUCK. n. f. [anas; ducken, to dip, Dutch.]

1. A waterfowl, both wild and tame.

The ducks, that heard the proclamation cried,
And fear'd a prosecution might betide,
Full twenty mile from town their voyage take,
Obscure in rushes of the liquid lake. Dryden.

Grubs, if you find your land subject to, turn ducks into it. Mortimer's Husbandry.

2. A word of endearment, or fondness.

Will you buy any tape or lace for your cap,
My dainty duck, my dear-a? Shakespeare.

3. A declination of the head; so called from the frequent action of a duck in the water.

Back, shepherds, back: enough your play
Till next sunshine holiday.

Here he without duck or nod,

Other trippings to be read,

Of lighter toes, and such count guise

As Mercury did first devise. Milton.

4. A stone thrown obliquely on the water, so as to strike it and rebound.

Neither cools and pile, nor ducks and shakes, are quite so ancient as handy-dandy. Arbutnot and Pope.

TO DUCK. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To dive under water as a duck.

The varlet saw, when to the flood he came,
How without stop or stay he fiercely leapt;
And deep himself he ducked in the faine,
That in the lake his lofty crest was steep. Fairy Queen.

Let the labouring bark climb hills of seas
Olympus high, and duck again as low
As hell's from heaven. Shakespeare's Othello.

Thou art wickedly devout;
In Tiber ducking thine by break of day. Dryden.

2. To drop down the head, as a duck.

As some raw youth in country bred,
When at a skirmish first he hears
The bullets whistling round his ears,
Will duck his head aside, will start,
And feel a trembling at his heart. Swift.

3. To bow low; to cringe. In Scottish duyk, or juyk, to make obeisance, is still used.

I cannot flatter and look fair,
Smile in men's faces, smooth, deceive, and cog,
Duck with French nods, and apish courtesy. Shakespeare.

The learned pate
Ducks to the golden fool. Shakespeare.

TO DUCK. v. a. To put under water.

DUCKER. n. f. [from duck.]

2. A cringer. Diis.

DUCKINGSTOOL. n. f. [duck and stool.] A chair in which scolds are tied, and put under water.

She in the ducking stool should take her seat,
Drest like herself in a great chain of state. Dorset.

Reclaim the obstinately opprobrious and virulent women, and make the ducking stool more useful. Addison's Freeholder.

DUCKLEGGED. adj. [duck and leg.] Short legged.

Ducklegg'd, short waisted, such a dwarf she is,
That she must sit on tip-toes for a kiss. Dryden.

DUCKLING. n. f. [from duck.] A young duck; the blood of the duck.

Ducklings, though hatched and led by a hen,
if she brings them to the brink of a river or pond,
piently leave her, and in they go. Ray.

Early morn
Amid the ducklings let her scatter corn. Gay.

DUCKMEAT. n. f. [duck and meat; lens palustris.] A common plant growing in standing waters; duckweed.

TO DUCKOY. v. a. [mistaken for decoy: the decoy being commonly practised upon ducks, produced the error.] To entice to a snare.

This fish hath a slender membranous string, which he projects and draws in at pleasure, as serpent doth his tongue: with this he ducks, little fishes, and preys upon them. Crew.

DUCKCOY. n. f. Any means of enticing and ensnaring.

Seducers have found it the most compendious way to their designs, to lead captive silly women, and make them the ducks; to their whole family. Deacy of Pity.

DUCKSROOT. n. f. Black snakeroot, or May-apple.

DUE

DUCKWEED. n. f. [duck and weed.] The same with duckweed.

That we call duckweed hath a leaf no bigger than a thyme leaf, but of a fresher green; and putteth forth a little string into the water, far from the bottom. Bacon.

DUCT. n. f. [ductus, Latin.]

1. Guidance; direction.

This doctrine, by fastening all our actions by a fatal decree at the foot of God's chair, leaves nothing to us but only to obey our fate, to follow the duct of the stars, or necessity of those iron chains which we are born under. Hammond.

2. A passage through which any thing is conducted: a term chiefly used by anatomists.

A duct from each of those cells ran into the root of the tongue, where both joined together, and passed forward in one common duct to the tip of it. Addison's Spectator.

It was observed that the chyle, in the thoracic duct, retained the original taste of the aliment. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

DUCTILE. adj. [ductilis, Latin.]

1. Flexible; pliable.

Thick woods and gloomy night
Conceal the happy plant from human sight:
One bough it bears; but, wondrous to behold!
The ductile rind and leaves of radiant gold. Dryden's Æneid.

2. Easy to be drawn out into length, or expanded.

All bodies ductile and tensile, as metals, that will be drawn into wires; wool and tow, that will be drawn into yarn or thread; have the appetite of not discontinuing strong. Bacon.

Gold, as it is the purest, so it is the softest and most ductile, of all metals. Dryden.

3. Tractable; obsequious; complying; yielding.

He generous thoughts infills
Of true nobility; forms their ductile minds
To human virtues. Philips.

Their designing leaders cannot desire a more ductile and easy people to work upon. Addison.

DUCTILENESS. n. f. [from ductile.]
Flexibility; ductility.

I, when I value gold, may think upon
The ductileness, the application;
The wholefomeness, the ingenuity,
From rust, from soil, from fire ever free. Donne.

DUCTILITY. n. f. [from ductile.]

1. Quality of suffering extension; flexibility.

Yellow colour and ductility are properties of gold: they belong to all gold, but not only to gold; for brass is also yellow, and lead is ductile. Watts' Logick.

2. Obsequiousness; compliance.

DUDGEON. n. f. [dolch, German.]

1. A small dagger.

It was a serviceable dudgeon,
Either for fighting or for drudging. Hudibras.

2. Malice; furliveness; malignity; ill-will.

Civil dudgeon first grew high
And men fell out they knew not why. Hudibras.
The cuckoo took this a little in dudgeon. L'Estrange.

DUE. adj. The part. pass. of owe. [dû, French.]

1. Owed; that any one has a right to demand in consequence of a compact, or for any other reason.

There is due from the judge to the advocate some commendation and gracing, where causes are well handled and fair pleaded. There is likewise due to the public a civil reprehension of advocates, where there appeareth cunning, gross neglect, or slight information. Bacon.

Mirth and cheerfulness are but the due reward of innocency of life. Mure's Divine Dialogues.

A present blessing upon our fasts is neither originally due from God's justice, nor becomes due to us from his veracity. Smalridge.

There is a respect due to mankind, which should incline ever the wisest of men to follow innocent customs. Watts.

2. Proper; fit; appropriate.

Opportunity may be taken to excite, in persons attending on those solemnities, a due sense of the vanity of earthly satisfactions. Atterbury.

3. Exact; without deviation.

You might see him come towards me beating the ground in due time, as no dancer can observe better measure. Sidney.

And Eve within, due at her hour, prepar'd
For dinner savoury fruits. Milton.

4. Consequent to; occasioned or effected by. Proper, but not usual.

The motion of the oily drops may be in part due to some partial solution made by the vinous spirit, which may tumble them to and fro. Boyle.

DUE. adv. [from the adjective.] Exactly; directly; duly. The course is due east, or due west.

Like the Pontick sea,
Whose icy current, and compulsive course,
Ne'er feels retiring ebb, but keeps due on To the Propontick and the Hellespont. Shakspeare.

DUE. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. That which belongs to one; that which may be justly claimed.

My due from thee is this imperial crown,
Which, as immediate from thy place and blood,
Derives itself to me. Shakspeare.

The son of Duncan,
From whom this tyrant holds the due of birth,
Lives in the English court. Shakspeare.

Thou better know'st
Effects of courtesy, dues of gratitude:
Thy half o' th' kingdom thou hast not forgot,
Wherein I thee endow'd. Shakspeare.

The due of honour in no point omit.
Shakspeare's Cymbeline.

I take this garland, not as given by you,
But as my merit and my beauty's due. Dryden.

Of all thy dues be done, and none left out. Milton.

They pay the dead his annual dues. Dryden.

4. Custom; tribute; exactions; legal or customary perquisites.

In respect to the exorbitant dues that are paid at most other ports, this deservedly retains the name of free. Addison.

TO DUE. v. a. [from the noun.] To pay as due; perhaps for endow. It is perhaps only in this single passage.

This is the latest glory of their praise,
That I thy enemy due thee withal. Shakspeare.

DUEL. n. f. [duellum, Latin.] A combat between two; a single fight.

In many armies, if the matter should be tried by duel between two champions, the victory should go on the one side; and yet, if it be tried by the gros, go on the other side. Bacon.

Dream not of your fight
At of a duel, or the local wounds
Of head or heel. Milton's Paradise Lost.

'Twas I that wrong'd you; you my life have sought:
No duel ever was more justly sought. Waller.

DUK

TO DUEL. v. n. [from the noun.] To fight a single combat.

He must at length, poor man! die dully at home, when here he might so fashionably and genteelly have been duelled or fluzed into another world. South.

The challenging and fighting with a man is called duelling. Locke.

TO DUEL. v. a. To attack or fight with singly.

Who single
Duell'd their armies rank'd in proud array,
Himself an army, now unequal match
To save himself against a coward arm'd,
At one spear's length. Milton's Agonistes.

DU'ELLER. n. f. [from duel.] A single combatant.

They perhaps begin as single duellists, but then they soon get their troops about them. Decay of Piety.

DU'ELLIST. n. f. [from duel.]

1. A single combatant.

If the king ends the differences, the case will fall out no worse than when two duellists enter the field, where the worsted party hath his sword again, without further hurt. Suckling.

Henceforth let poets, ere allow'd to write,
Be search'd like duellists before thy fight. Dryden.

2. One who professes to study the rules of honour.

His bought arms Mung not lik'd; for his first day
Of bearing them in field, he threw 'em away;
And hath no honour lost, our duellist say. Ben Jonson.

She tempers dulcet creams; nor these to hold Wants the fit vessels pure. Milton.

2. Sweet to the ear; harmonious; melodious.

I sat upon a promontory,
And heard a mermaid, on a dolphin's back,
Uttering such dulcet and harmonious breath,
That the rude sea grew civil at her song. Shaksp.

A fabrick huge
Rose like an exhalation, with the sound
Of dulcet symphonies, and voices sweet. Milton.

Dulcification. n. f. [from dulcify.]

The act of sweetening; the act of freeing from acidity, saltiness, or acri-mony.

In colcothar, the exactest calcination, followed by an exquisite dulcification, does not reduce the remaining body into elementary earth: for after the salt of vitriol, if the calcination have been too faint, is drawn out of the colcothar, the residue is not earth, but a mixt body, rich in medical virtues. Boyle.

To Du'LCIFY. v. a. [dulcifer, French.]

To sweeten; to set free from acidity, saltness, or acrimony of any kind.

A decoction of wild gourd, or colocynthis, though somewhat qualified, will not from every hand be dulcified into aliment, by an addition of flour or meal. Brown.

I dressed him with a pledgit, dipt in a dulci- fied tincture of vitriol. Wifeman's Surgery.

Spirit of wine dulcifies spirit of salt; nitre or vitriol have other bad effects. Arbutnot.

it procureth vomiting, and then salivation. Wifeman's Surgery.

Dulcora'tion. n. f. [from dulcorate.]

The act of sweetening.

Malt gathereth a sweetness to the taste, which appeareth in the wort: the dulcoration of things is worthy to be tried to the full; for that dulco- ration importeth a degree to nourishment: and the making of things malinal to become ali-mental, may be an experiment of great profit. Bacon.

Du'LEAD. n. f. [dull and head.] A blockhead; a wretch foolish and stupid; a dolt.

This people be fools and du'leads to all goodness; but subtle, cunning, and bold in any mischief. Ascham.

DUL

Du'lia. n. f. [δύλιν.] An inferior kind of adoration.

Paleotus saith, that the same worship which is given to the prototype may be given to the away the will of children from learning, than care in making of Latin. Ascham.

DUM

5. To damp; to clog.

Prayers were short, as if darts thrown out with a sudden quickness; lest that vigilant and erect attention of mind, which in prayer is very necessary, should be wasted or dulled through continuance. Hooker.

In bodies, union strengtheneth and cherisheth any natural action; and, on the other side, weakeneth and dulleth any violent impression:
and even so is it of minds. Bacon.

6. To make heavy, or slow of motion.

Uttery dulls and damps all industries, wherein money would be stirring, if it were not for the lug. Bacon.

The breath dulls the nostril. Bacon.

Du'llard. n. f. [from dull.] A block-head; a dolt; a stupid fellow; a dunce.

What! mak'st thou me a dullard in this act?
Wilt thou not speak to me? Shakespeare.

Thou must make a dullard of the world,
If they not thought the profits of my death
Were very pregnant and potential gains
To make thee seek it. Shakespeare.

Du'LLY. adv. [from dull.]

1. Stupidly; doltishly.

It is not sufficient to imitate nature in every circumstance dully, literally, and meanly; but it becomes a painter to take what is most beautiful. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

2. Slowly; sluggishly.

The air if it be moist, doth in a degree quench the flame, and bowsoever maketh it burn more dully. Bacon.

3. Not vigorously; not gayly; not brightly;
not keenly.

Not that I think those pantomimas,
Who vary action with the times,
Are less ingenious in their art
Than those who dully act one part. Hudibras.

Du'LNES. n. f. [from dull.]

1. Stupidity; weakness of intellect; in-docility; slowness of apprehension.

Nor is the dulness of the scholar to extinguish,
but rather to inflame, the charity of the teacher. Saurin.

Shadwel alone my perfect image bears,
Mature in dulness from his tender years. Dryden.

2. Want of quick perception.

Nature, by a continual use of any thing, groweth to a satiety and dulness either of appetite or working. Bacon.

3. Drowsiness; inclination to sleep.

Here cease more questions;
Thou art inclin'd to sleep. 'Tis a good dulness,
And give it way. Shakespeare's Tempest.

Ever since they firmly have retained,
And duly well observed his behest. Spenser.
My prayers

Are not words duly hallow'd, nor my wishes
More worth than vanities; yet prayers and wishes
Are all I can return. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

In the body, when the principal parts, as the heart and liver, do their offices, and all the inferiour smaller vessels act orderly and duly, there arises a sweet enjoyment upon the whole, which we call health. Saurin.

If attention be duly engaged to those reflections,
they cannot fail of inducement. Rogers.

2. Regularly; exactly.

Seldom at church, 'twas such a busy life;
But duly sent his family and wife. Pope.

DUMB. adj. [𐒃𐒐𐒗, he was silent;
dumbs, Gothic; dumbe, Saxon; dum,
Danish; dem, Dutch, dull.]

1. Mute; incapable of speech.

It hath pleased himself sometimes to unloose the very tongues even of dumb creatures, and to teach them to plead in their own defence, lest the cruelty of man should persist to afflict them.

Hooker.

They spake not a word;

But like dumb statues, or unbreathing fountains, Star'd each on other. Shakespeare's Rich. 111.

Some positive terms signify a negative idea: blind implies a privation of sight, dumb a denial of speech.

Watts' Logick.

2. Deprived of speech.

They sung no more, or only sung his fame; Struck dumb, they all admir'd the godlike man.

Dryden.

3. Mute; not using words.

He is a proper man's picture; but, alas! who can converse with a dumb show?

Shakespeare.

His gentle dumb expression turn'd at length The eye of Eve to mark his play.

Milton.

Her humble gestures made the residue plain, Dumb eloquence persuading more than speech.

Rafesman.

For he who covets gain in such excess Does by dumb signs himself as much express, As if in words at length he show'd his mind.

Dryden's Juvenal.

Nothing is more common than for lovers to complain, relent, languish, despair, and die in dumb show.

Addison.

4. Silent; refusing to speak.

The good old seer withstood Th' intended treason, and was dumb to blood; Till tir'd with endless clamours, and pursuit Of Ithacus, he stood no longer mute.

Dryden.

Spektator.

DUMP. n. f. [from dum, stupid, Dutch.]

1. Sorrow; melancholy; sadness.

Sing no more ditties, sing no mads Of dumps so dull and heavy;

The frauds of men were ever so, Since summer first was leafy.

Shakespeare.

Visit by night your lady's chamber window With some sweet concert: to their instruments Tune a deploring dump: the night's dead silence Will well become such sweet complaining grievance.

Shakespeare.

Funerals with stately pomp March slowly on in solemn dump.

Hudibras.

The squire who fought on bloody dumps, By future bards bewail'd in doleful dumps.

Gay.

2. Absence of mind; reverie.

Locke ules dumps singularly.

This shame dumps cause to well-bred people, when it carries them away from the company.

Locke.

DUMPIST. adj. [from dump.] Sad; melancholy; sorrowful.

New year, forth looking out of Janus' gate, Duth seem to promise hopes of new delight;

And bidding th' old adieu, his passed date Bids an old thought to die in dumps spite.

Spenser.

The life which I live at this age is not a dead, dumpish, and sour life; but cheerful, lively, and pleasant.

Herbert.

DUMFLING. n. f. [from dump, heaviness.]

A sort of pudding.

Pudding and dumpling burn to pot. Dryden.

DUN. adj. [dun, Saxon.]

1. A colour partaking of brown and black.

We are not to expect a strong and full white, such as is that of paper; but some dusky obscure one, such as might arise from a mixture of light and darkness, or from white and black, that is, a grey, or dun, or russet brown.

Newton.

2. Dark; gloomy.

Come, thick night!

And pall thee in the dunest smoke of hell. Shakspeare.

He then survey'd

Hell and the gulph between, and Satan there Coasting the wall of heaven on this side,

In the dun air sublime. Milton's Par. Lost.

To DUN. v. a. [dunan, Saxon, to clamour.] To claim a debt with vehemence and importunity.

Borrow of thy back, and borrow of thy belly: they'll never ask thee again. I shall be dunning thee every day.

Bacon.

When thou dunst their parents, seldom they, Without a suit before the tribune, pry.

Dryden.

I remember what the won: And hath she sent so soon to dun?

Swift.

DUN. n. f. [from the verb.] A clamorous, importunate, troublesome creditor.

Thus, while my joyless minutes tedious flow, With looks demure, and silent pace, a dun, Horrible monster! hated by gods and men, To my aerial citadel ascends.

Philips.

It grieves my heart to be pulled by the sleeve by some rascally dun—Sir, remember my bill.

Arbutnot's John Bull.

DUNCE. n. f. [A word of uncertain etymology; perhaps from dum, Dutch, stupid.] A dullard; a dolt; a thick-skull; a stupid, indocile animal.

Dunce at the best, in streets but scarce allow'd To tinkle, on thy straw, the stupid crowd.

Dryden.

Was Epiphanius so great a dunce to imagine a thing, indifferent in itself, should be directly opposite to the law of God?

Stillington.

I never knew this town without dunces of figure, who had credit enough to give rise to some new word.

Swift.

DUNG. n. f. [dineg, Saxon.] The excrement of animals used to fatten ground.

For dung, all excrements are the refuse and putrefactions of nourishment.

Bacon.

I judge the likeliest way to be, the perforation of the body of the tree in several places, one above the other; and the filling of the holes with dung, mingled with the medicine; and the watering of those lumps of dung with squirts of an infusion of the medicine in dunged water, once in three or four days.

Bacon's Nat. Hist.

For when from herbs the pure part must be won From gross by stilling, this is better done

By dungs'd dung than by the fire or sun. Doane.

He soon would learn to think like me, And bless his ravish'd eyes to see

Such order from confusion sprung, Such gaudy tulips rais'd from dung.

Swift.

To DUNG. v. a. [from the noun.] To manure with dung.

It was received of old, that dunging of grounds when the west wind bloweth, and in the decrease of the moon, doth greatly help.

Bacon.

There, as his dearth would, a cart he found, That carried compost forth to dung the ground.

Dryden.

DUNGEON. n. f. [from donjon, the tower in which prisoners were kept, whence all prisons eminently strong were in time called dungeons.] A close prison: generally spoke of a prison dark or subterraneous.

Then up he took the slumber'd senseless coast, And, ere he could out of his swoon awake, Him to his castle brought with hasty force, And in a dungeon deep him threw without remorse.

Spenser.

We know not that the king of heav'n hath doom'd

This place our dungeon; not our safe retreat Beyond his potent arm.

Milton.

Now from the north

Of Normbeque, and the Samoed shore, Bursting their brazen dungeons, arm'd with ice, And snow, and hail, come stormy gust and flaw.

Milton.

By imagination, a man in a dungeon is capable of entertaining himself with scenes and landscapes, more beautiful than any that can be found in the whole compass of nature.

Addison.

DUNGFORK. n. f. [dung and fork.] A fork to toss out dung from stables.

Dungforks and paddles are common every where.

Mortimer.

DUNGHIL. n. f. [dung and bill.]

1. A heap or accumulation of dung.

I, his brother, gain nothing under him but growth; for the which his animals on his dung-hills are as much bound to him as I.

Shakspeare.

Two cocks fought a duel for the mastery of a dung-hill.

L'Estrange.

Never enter into a league of friendship with an ingrateful person; that is, plant not thy friendship upon a dung-hill: it is too noble a plant for so base a soil.

Seneca.

The dung-hill having raised a huge mushroom of short duration, is now spread to enrich other men's land.

Swift.

2. Any mean or vile abode.

Perhaps a thousand other worlds, that lie Remote from us, and latent in the sky, Are lighten'd by his beams, and kindly nurs'd, Of which our earthly dung-hill is the worst.

Dryden.

DUR

DUPE. n. f. [dupe, French; from duppe, a foolish bird, easily caught.] A credulous man; a man easily tricked. A modern word hardly established. An usurping populace is its own dupe, a mere underworker, and a purchaser in trust for some single tyrant. Swift.

First slave to words, then vassal to a name,
Then dupe to party; child and man the same. Dunciad.

To DUPE. v. a. [from the noun.] To trick; to cheat.

The throne a bigot keep, a genius quit;
Faithless through piety, and dup'd through wit. Pope.

DUPLE. adj. [duplus, Latin.] Double; one repeated.

To DUPLICATE. v. a. [duplico, Lat.] 1. To double; to enlarge by the repetition of the first number or quantity.

And some alterations in the brain duplicate that which is but a single object to our undisturbed sentiments. Glanville.

2. To fold together.

DUPPLICATE. adj. [from the verb.]

Duplicate proportion is the proportion of squares. Thus, in a rank of geometrical proportions, the first term to the third is said to be in a duplicate ratio of the first to the second, or as its square is to the square of the second: so in 2, 4, 8, 16, the ratio of 2 to 8 is a duplicate of that of 2 to 4, or as the square of 2 to the square of 4. Phillips, Harris, Bailey.

It has been found, that the attraction is almost reciprocally in a dupli-ate proportion of the distance of the middle of the drop from the concourse of the glasses, viz. reciprocally in a simple proportion, by reason of the spreading of the drop, and its touching each glass in a larger surface; and again reciprocally in a simple proportion, by reason of the attractions growing stronger within the same quantity of attracting surface. Newson's Opticks.

DUPPLICATE. n. f. Another correspondent to the first; a second thing of the same kind, as a transcript of a paper.

Nothing is more needful for perfecting the natural history of bodies, than the subjecting them to the fire; to which end I have reserved duplicates of the most considerable. Woodward.

DUPPLICATION. n. f. [from duplicate.]

What great pains hath been taken concerning the quadrature of a circle, and the duplication of a cube, and some other mathematical problems. Hall's Origin of Mankind.

2. The act of folding together.

3. A fold; a doubling.

The peritonæum is a strong membrane, every where double; in the duplications of which all the viscera of the abdomen are hid. Weseman.

DUPPLICATION. n. f. [from duplicate.] A fold; any thing doubled.

The lympheducts, either dilated or obstructed, exonerate themselves into the foldings, or between the duplicatures of the membranes. Ray on the Circulation.

DUPPLICITY. n. f. [duplicitas, Lat.]

1. Doubleness; the number of two.

This duplicity was ill contrived to place one head at both extremes, and had been more tolerable to have set three or four at once. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Do not affect duplicities nor triplicities, nor any certain number of parts, in your division of things. Watts.

2. Deceit; doubleness of heart or of tongue.

DURABILITY. n. f. [durabilis, Latin.] The power of lasting; continuance; endurance.

DUR

Stones, though in dignity of nature inferior unto plants, yet exceed them in firmness of strength, or durability of being. Hooker.

Our times upon the earth have neither certainty nor durability. Raleigh.

DURABLE. adj. [durabilis, Latin.]

1. Lasting; having the quality of long continuance.

The bones of his body we may compare to the hard rocks and stones, and therefore strong and durable. Raleigh.

With pins of adamant,
And chains, they made all fast; too fast they made,
And durable! Milton.

The glories of her majesty's reign ought to be recorded in words more durable than brass, and such as our posterity may read a thousand years hence. Swift.

2. Having successive existence.

Time, though in eternity, applied
To motion, measures all things durable
By present, past, and future. Milton.

DURABLENESS. n. f. [from durable.]

Power of lasting; continuance.

The different consistence and durableness of the strata whereof they consist, are more or less. Woodward.

A bad poet, if he cannot become immortal by the goodness of his verse, may by the durableness of the metal that supports it. Addison.

DURABLY. adv. [from durable.] In a lasting manner.

There indeed he found his fame flourishing, his monuments engraved in marble, and yet more durably in men's memories. Stidney.

DURANCE. n. f. [from durasse, law Fr.]

1. Imprisonment; the custody or power of a jailer; a prison.

Thy Dol, and Helen of thy noble thoughts,
Is in base durance and contagious prison;
Haul'd thither by mechanick dirty hands. Shak.

A poor, innocent, forlorn stranger, languishing in durance, upon the false accusations of a lying, insolent, whorish woman. South.

There 's neither iron bar nor gate,
Portcullis, chain, nor bolt, nor grate;
And yet men durance there abide,
In dungeons scarce three inches wide. Huabras.

Notwithstanding the warning and example before me, I commit myself to lasting durance. Congrave's Old Buckler.

2. Endurance; continuance; duration.

A doubtful word.

Sick nature at that instant trembled round,
And mother earth sigh'd as she felt the wound:
Of how short durance was this new made state!
How far more mighty than heav'n's love, hell's hate! Dryden.

DURATION. n. f. [duratio, Latin]

1. A sort of distance or length, the idea whereof we get, not from the permanent parts of space, but from the fleeting and perpetually perishing parts of succession. Locke.

2. Power of continuance.

Duration is a circumstance so essential to happiness, that if we conceived it possible for the joys of heaven itself to pass from us in an instant, we should find ourselves not much concerned for the attainment of them. Rogers.

3. Length of continuance.

Artifice, by greatness of action, does not only mean it should be great in its nature, but also in its duration; that it should have a due length in it. Addison.

To DURE. v. n. [duro, Latin.] To last; to continue; to endure.

The delights and pleasures of the world are most pleasing while they dure. Raleigh.

DUS

DUREFUL. adj. [from dure and full.]

Lasting; of long continuance; durable. Not in use.

The dureful oak, whose sap is not yet dried,
Is long ere it conceive the kindling fire;
But when it once doth burn, it doth divide
Great heat, and makes his flames to heav'n aspire. Spenser.

DURELESS. adj. [from dure.] Without continuance; fading; transitory; short. Not in use.

Yet were that aptitude natural, more inclinable to follow and embrace the false and dureless pleasures of this stage-play world, than to become the shadow of God. Raleigh.

DURESSE. n. f. [French; hardship, severity.]

1. Imprisonment; constraint; confinement.

2. In law.

A plea used, by way of exception, by him who, being cast into prison at a man's suit, or otherwise by threats, beating, &c. hardly used, seals any bond to him during his restraint. This the law holds as invalid, and supposes to be constrained. Cowell.

DURING. prep. [This word is rather a participle from dure: as, during life, durante vita, life continuing; during my pleasure, my pleasure continuing the same.] For the time of the continuance of; while any thing lasts.

If during his childhood he be constantly and rigorously kept from drinking cold liquor whilst he is hot, forbearance grows into a habit. Locke.

DURITY. n. f. [durelé, French; durus, Lat.] Hardness; firmness.

Ancients did burn fragments of marble, which in time became marble again, at least of indissoluble durity, as appeareth in the standing theatres. Watson's Architecture.

Irridancy or sparkling, found in many gems, is not discoverable in this; for it cometh short of their compactness and durity. Brown.

DURST. The preterit of dare.

The christians durst have no images of the Deity, because they would rather die than defile themselves with such an impiety. Stillington.

DUSK. adj. [dyster, Dutch.]

1. Tending to darkness. See DUSKY.

2. Tending to blackness; dark-coloured.

The hills, to their supply,
Vapour and exhalation, dusk and moist,
Sent up again. Milton.

DUSK. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. Tendency to darkness; incipient obscurity.

I will wait on you in the dusk of the evening, with my bow upon my back. Spenser.

2. Darkeness of colour; tendency to blackness.

Some sprinkled freckles on his face were seen,
Whole dusk set off the whiteness of the skin. Dryden.

To DUSK. v. a. [from the noun.] To make dusky.

To DUSK. v. n. To grow dark; to begin to lose light or brightness; to have lustre diminished. Die.

DUSKILY. adv. [from dusky.] With a tendency to darkness or blackness.

DUSKISH. adj. [from dusk.]

1. Inclining to darkness; tending to obscurity.

From his infernal furnace forth he threw,
Huge flames, that dimm'd all the heav'n's lights,
Enroll'd in dusky smoke, and imestone blue. Spenser.

2. Tending to blackness; dark-coloured.

DUS

Sight is not contented with sudden departments from one extreme to another; therefore rather a dusky tincture than an absolute black. Wotton.

DUSKILY. adv. [from dusky.] Cloudily; darkly.

The sawdust burned fair, till part of the candle consumed: the dust gathering about the snail, made the snail to burn dusky. Bacon.

DUSKY. adj. [from dusk; dusker, Dutch.]

1. Tending to darkness; obscure; not luminous.

Here lies the dusky torch of Mortimer, Chok'd with ambition of the meaner sort. Shak.
There fierce winds o'er dusky valleys blow,
Whole every puff bears empty shades away. Dryden.

Through the plains, of one continual day,
Six shining months pursue their even way;
And fix succeeding urge their dusky flight,
Obscur'd with vapours and o'erwhelm'd in night. Prior.

2. Tending to blackness; dark-coloured; not clear; not bright.

They did plot
The means that dusky Dis my daughter got. Shakespeare.

It is not green, but of a dusky brown colour. Bacon.

When Jove in dusky clouds involves the skies,
And the faint crescent shoots by his before their eyes. Dryden.

The surface is of a dusky yellow colour. Wotton.
By mixing such powders, we are not to expect a strong and full white, such as is that of paper; but some dusky obscure one, such as might arise from a mixture of light and darkness, or from white and black; that is, a grey, or dun, or ruddy brown. Newton's Opticks.

3. Gloomy; sad; intellectually clouded.

While he continues in life, this dusky scene of horror, this melancholy prospect of final perdition, will frequently occur to his fancy. Beattie.
Umbriel, a dusky, melancholy sprite,
As ever sullied the fair face of light,
Down to the central earth, his proper scene,
Repairs to search the gloomy cave of spleen. Pope.

DUST. n. f. [Dyrt, Saxon; dulst, Erse.]

1. Earth or other matter reduced to small particles.

The dust
Should have ascended to the roof of heav'n,
Rais'd by your populous troops. Shaksp.
Dust helpeth the fruitfulness of trees, inasmuch as they cast dust upon them: that powdering, when a shower cometh, maketh a foiling to the tree, being earth and water finely laid on. Bacon.

2. The grave; the state of dissolution.

The sceptre, learning, physick, must
All follow this, and come to dust. Shaksp.

Out of the ground wast taken, know thy birth;
For dust thou art, and shalt to dust return. Milton.

3. A mean and dejected state.

God raiseth up the poor out of the dust, to set them among princes. 1 Samuel.

TO DUST. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To free from dust.

2. To sprinkle with dust.

DUSTMAN. n. f. [dust and man.] One whose employment is to carry away the dust.

The dustman's cart offends thy clothes and eyes,
When through the street a cloud of ashes flies. Gay.

DUSTY. adj. [from dust.]

1. Filled with dust; clouded with dust.

All our yesterdays have lighted fools
The way to dusky death. Shakespeare.
Arms and the dusty fields I less admire,
And sicken strangely in some new desire. Dryden.

2. Covered or scattered with dust.

DUT

Even Drudgery himself,
As at the car he sweats, or dusky hews
The palace stone, looks gay. Thomson.

DUTCHASS. n. f. [ducheffe, French.]

1. The lady of a duke.

The duke of Cornwall, and Regan his dutchess, will be here. Shakespeare.

The duke was to command the army, and the dutchess, by the favour she possessed, to be near her majesty. Swift.

The generous god who wit and gold refines,
And ripens spirits as he ripens mines,
Kept dross for dutchesses, the world shall know it,
To you gave sense, good humour, and a poet. Pope.

2. A lady who has the sovereignty of a dukedom.

DUTCHY. n. f. [duché, French.] A territory which gives title to a duke, or has a duke for its sovereign.

Different states border on it; the kingdom of France, the dutchy of Savoy, and the canton of Berne. Addison.

France might have swallowed up his whole dutchy. Swift.

DUTCHY-COURT. n. f. A court wherein all matters appertaining to the dutchy of Lancaster are decided by the decree of the chancellor of that court. Cowell.

DUTEOUS. adj. [from duty.]

1. Obedient; obsequious; respectful to those who have natural or regal authority.

Great Aurengzebe did duteous care express,
And durst not push too far his great success. Dryden.

A female softness, with a manly mind;
A duteous daughter, and a sister kind;
In sickness patient, and in death resign'd. Dryd.
Who taught the bee with winds and rains to strive,

To bring her burden to the certain hive;
And through the liquid fields again to pass
Duteous, and hark'ning to the founding brass? Prior.

2. Obsequious; obedient to good or bad purposes; with to.

I know thee well; a servicable villain!
As duteous to the vices of thy mistress,
As badness would desire. Shakespeare.
Every beast, more duteous at her call,
Than at Circean call the herd disguis'd. Milton.

3. Enjoined by duty; enforced by the relation of one to another. This sense is not now used.

With mine own tongue deny my sacred right,
With mine own breath release all duteous ties. Shakespeare.

DUTIFUL. adj. [duty and full.]

1. Obedient; submissive to natural or legal superiors; reverent.

She died in an extreme old age, without pain, under the care of the most dutiful son that I have ever known or heard of. Swift is Pope.

2. Expressive of respect; giving token of reverence; respectful; reverential.

There would she kiss the ground, and thank the trees, bless the air, and do dutiful reverence to every thing the thought did accompany her at their first meeting. Sidney.

DUTIFULLY. adv. [from dutiful.]

1. Obediently; submissively.

2. Reverently; respectfully.

His daughter Philoclea he found at that time dutifully watching by her mother, and Mitho curiously watching her. Sidney.

He with joyful, nimble wing,
Flew dutifully back again,
And made a humble chaplet for the king. Swift.

DUTIFULNESS. n. f. [from dutiful.]

DWA

1. Obedience; submission to just authority.

Piety, or dutifulness to parents, was a most popular virtue among the Romans. Dryden.

2. Reverence; respect.

It is a strange kind of civility, and an evil dutifulness in friends and relatives, to suffer him to perish without reproof or medicine, rather than to seem unmanly to a great sinner. Taylor.

DUTY. n. f. [from due.]

1. That to which a man is by any natural or legal obligation bound.

When ye shall have done all those things which are commanded you, say, We are unprofitable servants: we have done that which was our duty to do. Luke.

The pain children feel from any necessity of natic, it is the duty of parents to relieve. Locke.

2. Acts or forbearances required by religion or morality. In this sense it has a plural.

Good my lord,
You have begot me, bred me, lov'd me: I Return those duties back, as are right fit;
Obey you, love you, and most honour you. Shakespeare.

All our duty is set down in our prayers, because in all our duty we beg the Divine assistance; and remember that you are bound to do all those duties, for the doing of which you have prayed for the Divine assistance. Taylor.

3. Obedience or submission due to parents, governors, or superiors; loyalty; piety to parents.

Think'st thou that duty shall have dread to speak,
When pow'r to flattery bows? To plainness honour

Is bound, when majesty to folly falls. Shak.

God's party will appear small, and the king's not greater: it being not probable, that those should have sense of duty to him that had none to God. Decay of Piety.

4. Act of reverence or respect.

They both atone,
Did duty to their lady as became. Fairy Queen.

5. The business of a soldier on guard.

The regiment did duty there punctually. Clarendon.
Orho, as often as Galba supped with him,
used to give every soldier upon duty an aureus. Arbutnot.

6. The business of war; service.

The night came and severed them, all parties being tired with the duty of the day. Clarendon.
See how the madmen bleed! Behold the gains
With which their master, love, rewards their pains!
For seven long years, on duty ev'ry day,
Lo! their obedience, and their monarch's pay! Dryden.

7. Tax; impost; custom; toll.

All the wines make their way through several duties and taxes, before they reach the port. Addison.
Such shekels as they now shew, were the old ones in which duty was to be paid by their law. Arbutnot.

DWARF. n. f. [dyworp, Saxon; dwerg, Dutch.]

1. A man below the common size of men.

Get you gone, you dworf!
You minims, of hind'ring knot-grafs made. Shakespeare.

Such dwarfs were some kind of apes. Brown.
They, but now who seem'd
In bigness to surpass earth's giant sons,
Now less than smallest dwarfs, in narrow rooms Throng numberless. Milton.

2. Any animal or plant below its natural bulk.

In a delicate plantation of trees, all well grown, fair, and smooth, one dwarf was knotty and crooked, and the rest had it in derision. L'Eggr.
Saw off the stock in a smooth place; and for dwarf trees, graft them within four fingers of the ground. Mortimer.

3. An attendant on a lady or knight in romances.

The champion stout,
Effluences dismounted from his courser brave,
And to the dwarf awhile his needle's spear he gave. Spenser.

4. It is used often by botanists in composition: as, dwarf-elder, dwarf-honey-suckle.

To DWARF. v. a. [from the noun.] To hinder from growing to the natural bulk; to lessen; to make little.

It is reported that a good strong canvas, spread over a tree grafted low, soon after it putteth forth, will dwarf it, and make it spread. Bacon.

The whole sex is in a manner dwarfed, and shrunk into a race of beauties, that seems almost another species. Addison.

DWARFISH. adj. [from dwarf.] Below the natural bulk; low; small; little; petty; despicable.

Their dwarfish pages were,
As cherubins, all gilt. Shakspeare.

And are you grown so high in his esteem,
Because I am so dwarfish and so low? Shakspeare.

This unheard laciness, and boyish troops,
The king doth smile at; and is well prepar'd
To whip this dwarfish war, these pigmy arms,
From our the circle of his territories. Shak.

A thicket close beside the grove there stood,
With briars and brambles choak'd, and dwarfish wood. Dryden.

We should have lost oaks and cedars, and the other tall and lofty sons of the forest, and have found nothing but dwarfish shrubs, and crawling mosses, and despicable mushrooms. Bacon.

DWARFISHLY. adv. [from dwarfish.] Like a dwarf.

DWARFISHNESS. n. f. [from dwarfish.] Minuteness of stature; littleness.

'Tis no wonder that science hath not outgrown the dwarfishness of its pristine stature, and that the intellectual world is such a microcosm. Glanville.

To DWAULE. v. a. [Dwale, Saxon, to wander; dwaelen, Dutch.] To be delirious: a provincial word mentioned by Junius.

To DWELL. v. n. preterit dwelt, or dwelled. [dualla, old Teutonic, is stay, delay; duelia, Islandick, to stay, to stand still.]

1. To inhabit; to live in a place; to reside; to have a habitation.

If thy brother that dwelleth by thee be waxen poor, and be told unto thee, thou shalt not compel him to serve as a bond-servant. Leviticus.

He shall dwell alone, without the camp shall his habitation be. Leviticus.

John Haywood and Sir Thomas More, in the parish wherein I was born, dwell and had possessions. Peacocks.

Why are you vex'd, lady? Why do you frown?
Here dwell no frowns, nor anger; from these gates Sorrow flies far. Milton.

2. To live in any form of habitation.

Abraham sojourned in the Land of Promise as in a strange country, dwelling in tabernacles. Heb.

3. To be in any state or condition.

'Tis safer to be that which we destroy,
Than by destruction dwell in doubtful joy. Shak.

4. To be suspended with attention; to hang upon with care or fondness.

He in great passion all this while did dwell;
More busying his quick eyes her face to view,
Than his dull ears to hear what she did tell. Spenser.
Th' attentive queen

Dwelt on his accents. Smith.
Such was that face, on which I dwelt with joy,
Ere Greece assembled stem'd the tides to Troy. Pope.

5. To continue long speaking.

He preach'd the joys of heav'n, and pains of hell,
And warn'd the sinner with becoming zeal:
But on eternal mercy lov'd to dwell. Dryden.

We have dwell pretty long on the considerations of space and duration. Locke.

Those who defend our negotiators, dwell upon their zeal and patience. Swift.

To DWELL. v. a. To inhabit. Not used.

I saw and heard; for we sometimes
Who dwell this wild, constrain'd by want, come forth

To town or village nigh. Milton.

DWELLER. n. f. [from dwell.] An inhabitant; one that lives in any place.

The houses being kept up, did of necessity enforce a dwell; and the proportion of land for occupation being kept up, did of necessity enforce that dwell not to be beggar or cottager, but a man of some substance. Bacon.

Their cries soon waken all the dwellers near;
Now murmuring noises rise in every street. Dryden.

DWELLING. n. f. [from dwell.]

1. Habitation; place of residence; abode.

His dwelling is low in a valley green,
Under the foot of Rauran moily shore. Fairy Qu.
Hazor shall be a dwelling for dragons, and a desolation for ever. Jeremiah.

If he have several *dwelling*s, let him sort them for, that what he wanteth in the one he may find in the other. Bacon.

God will deign
To visit oft the *dwelling*s of just men, Delighted. Milton.

All *dwelling*s else
Flood overwhelm'd, and them with all their pomp Deep under water roll'd; sea cover'd sea,
Sea without shore! Milton.

The living few and frequent funerals then Proclaim'd thy wath on this forsaken place;
And now those few, who are return'd again,
Thy searching judgments to their *dwelling*s trace. Dryden.

The force of fire ascended first on high,
And took its dwelling in the vaulted sky. Dryden.

2. State of life; mode of living.

My dwelling shall be with the beasts of the field. Daniel.

DWELLINGHOUSE. n. f. [from dwell and house.] The house at which one lives.

A person ought always to be cited at the place of his dwellinghouse, which he has in respect of his habitation and usual residence; and not at the house which he has in respect of his estate, or the place of his birth. Asylife.

DWELLINGPLACE. n. f. [dwell and place.]

The place of residence.

People do often change their dwellingplaces, and some must die, whilst other some do grow up into strength. Spenser.

To DWINDLE. v. n. [Dwman, Saxon.]

1. To shrink; to lose bulk; to grow little.

Thy dwindled legs seem crawling to the grave. Dryden.

Proper names, when familiarized in English, dwindle to monosyllables; whereas in other languages they receive a softer turn, by the addition of a new syllable. Addison.

Our drooping days are dwindled down to nought,
Their period finish'd ere 'tis well begun. Thomson.

2. To degenerate; to sink.

'Tis now dwindled down to light frothy stuff. Norris.

If there have been such a gradual diminution of the generative faculty of the earth, that it hath dwindled from nobler animals to puny mice and insects, why was there not the like decay in the production of vegetables? Bentley.

He found the expected council was dwindling into a conventicle, a packed assembly of Italian bishops, not a free convention of fathers. Atterb.

Religious societies, though begun with excellent intentions, are said to have dwindled into factious clubs. Swift.

3. To wear away; to lose health; to grow feeble.

Weary few nights nine times nine,
Shall he dwindle, peak, and pine. Shakspeare.

We see, that some small part of the foot being injured by a wrench or a blow, the whole leg or thigh thereby loses its strength and nourishment, and dwindles away. Locke.

Physicians, with their milky cheer,
The love-sick maid and dwindling beau repair. Gay.

4. To fall away; to be diminished; to moulder off.

Under Greenvil, there were only five hundred foot and three hundred horse left; the rest were dwindled away. Clarendon.

It doth end in a dysentery, pains of the haemorrhoids, inflammations of any of the lower parts, diabetes, a continual pissing, or a bad dysuria, difficulty of making water. Harsgar.

E A D

E Has two sounds; long, as scene, and short, as men. E is the most frequent vowel in the English language; for it not only is used like the rest in the beginning or end of words, but has the peculiar quality of lengthening the foregoing vowel, as, cān, cāne; mān, māne; gān, gāne; glād, glāde; brād, brāde; chīn, chīne; wīp, wīpe; thīn, thīne; nūd, nūde; tūn, tūne; plūm, plūme. Yet it sometimes occurs final, where yet the foregoing vowel is not lengthened; as, gāne, knowledge, edge, give. Anciently almost every word ended with e, as for can, canne; for year, yeare; for great, greate; for need, neede; for flock, flocke. It is probable that this final had at first a soft sound, like the female e of the French; and that afterward it was in poetry either mute or vocal, as the verse required, till at last it became universally silent.

Ea has the sound of e long: the e is commonly lengthened rather by the immediate addition of a than by the apposition of e to the end of the word; as mēn, mēan; fēl, fēal; mēt, mēat; nēt, nēat.

EACH. pron. [elc, Saxon; elch, Dutch; ilk, Scottish.]

1. Either of two.

Though your orbs of different greatness be,
Yet both are for each other's use dispos'd;
His to inclose, and your's to be inclos'd. Dryd.

2. Every one of any number. This sense is rare, except in poetry.

Th' invention all admir'd, and each how he
To be th' inventor mis'd. Milton.

Let each
His adamant coat gird well, and each Fit well his helm. Milton.

By hunger, that each other creature tames,
Thou art not to be harm'd, therefore not mov'd;
Thy temperance invincible besides. Milton.

Wife Plato said, the world with men was stor'd,
That succour each to other might afford. Denham.

To EACH the correspondent word is other, whether it be used of two, or of a greater number.

'Tis said they eat each other. Shakspeare.
Let each esteem other better than themselves. Phil.

Loveliest of women! heaven is in thy soul;
Beauty and virtue shine for ever round thee,
Bright'ning each other! Thou art all divine. Adelphi's Cato.

EAD. [ad, ed.] in the compound, and eadig in the simple names, denotes happiness, or blessedness. Thus Eadward is a happy preserver; Eadulph, happy assistance; Eadgar, happy power; Eadwin, happy conqueror; which Macarius, Eupolemus, Fausla, Fortunatus, Felicianus, &c. do in some measure resemble. Ead may also in some cases be derived from the Saxon eath, which signifies easy, gentle, mild. Gilf. Gamden.

EA'GER. adj. [eagor, Saxon; aigre, French.]

1. Struck with desire; ardently wishing; keenly desirous; vehement in desire; hotly longing.

Of action eager, and intent of thought,
The chiefs your honourable danger sought. Dryd.
Eager to read the rest, Achates came. Dryden.
With joy th' ambitious youth his mother heard,
And, eager, for the journey, soon prepar'd;
He longs the world beneath him to survey,
To guide the chariot, and to give the day. Dryd.
Love inflam'd, and eager on his bliss,
Smother'd her words. Addison's Ovid.

2. It is used sometimes with of, sometimes with for, sometimes with on or after before the thing sought.

3. Hot of disposition; vehement; ardent; impetuous.

Apt as well to quicken the spirits as to allay that which is too eager. Hooker.
Nor do the eager clamours of disputants yield more relief to eclipsed truth, than did the founding brats of old to the labouring moon. Glavinille.
Imperfect zeal is hot and eager, without knowledge. Spratt.
Eager his tone, and ardent were his eyes. Dryden.

A man, charged with a crime of which he thinks himself innocent, is apt to be too eager in his own defence. Dryden.

4. Quick; busy; easily put in action.

His Numidian genius
Is well dispos'd to mischief, where he prompts
And eager on it; but he must be spur'd. Addis.

5. Sharp; four; acid.

With a sudden vigour it doth posset
And curd, like eager droppings into milk,
The thin and wholesome blood. Shakspeare.

6. Keen; severe; biting.

The air bites shrewdly; it is very cold.
—It is a nipping and an eager air. Shakspeare.
The flesh shrinketh, but the bone rethiketh, wherby the cold becometh more eager. Bacon.

7. Brittle; inflexible; not ductile. A cant word of artificers.

Gold will be sometimes too eager, as artists call it, that it will as little endure the hammer as glais itself. Locke.

EA'GERLY. adv. [from eager.]

1. With great ardour of desire; with impetuosity of inclination.

To the holy war how fast and eagerly did men go, when the priest persuaded them that whoever died in that expedition was a martyr! South.
How eagerly he flew, when Europe's fate
Did for the seed of future actions wait. Stepney.

E A G

E A G

2. Ardently; hotly.

Brutus gave the word too early,
Who having some advantage on Octavius,
Took it too eagerly; his soldiers fell to spoil,
Whilst we by Anthony were inclos'd. Shakspeare.

3. Keenly; sharply.

Abundance of rain froze so eagerly as it fell, that it seemed the depth of winter had of a sudden been come in. Knolles' History of the Turks.

EA'GERNESS. n. f. [from eager.]

1. Keeness of desire; ardour of inclination.

She knew her distance, and did angle for me,
Madding my eagerness with her restraint. Shaks.
Have you not seen, when whistled from the hill,
Some faulcon stoop'd at what her eye design'd,
And, with her eagerness, the quarry mil'd. Dryden.

The eagerness and strong bent of the mind after knowledge if not warily regulated, is often an hindrance to it. Locke.

Detraction and obloquy are received with as much eagerness as wit and humour. Addison.

Juba lives to catch
That dear embrace, and to return it too,
With mutual warmth and eagerness of love. Addison's Cato.

His continued application to publick affairs diverts him from those pleasures, which are pursued with eagerness by princes who have not the publick so much at heart. Addison.

The things of this world, with whatever eage-ness they engage our pursuit, leave us still empty and unsatisfied with their fruition. Rogers.

2. Impetuosity; vehemence; violence.

It finds them in the eagerness and height of their devotion; they are so chiefs for the time that it continues, and prostrate and dead when it departs. Dryden.

I'll kill thee with such eagerness of haste,
As hounds, let loose, would lay all nature waste. Dryden.

EA'GLE. n. f. [aigle, French; aquila, Latin; caller, Erse.]

1. A bird of prey.

The eagle, as it is reported, renews its age when it grows old. It is also said not to drink at all, like other birds with sharp claws. It is given out, that when an eagle sees its young so well grown as to venture upon flying, it hovers over their nest, and excites them to imitate it, and take their flight; and when it sees them
weary, or fearful, it takes them upon its back.
Eagles are said to be extremely sharp-sighted, and, when they take flight, spring perpendicularly upward, with their eyes steadily fixed upon the sun. Calmes.

Draw forth the monsters of th' abyss profound,
Or fetch th' aerial eagle to the ground. Pope.

2. The standard of the ancient Romans.

Arms still follow'd where Rome's eagles flew. Pope.

EA'GLE-EYED. adj. [from eagle and eyed.]

Sharp-sighted as an eagle.
As he was quick and perspicacious, so was he inwardly eagle-eyed, and veried in the humours of his subjects. Hewitt.

Every one is eagle-eyed to see Another's faults and his deformity. Dryden.
EA'GLESPEED. n. f. [eagle and speed.]
Swiftnefs like that of an eagle.
Abrupt, with eaglespeed she cut the sky, Instant invincible to mortal eye. Pope.

EA'GLESTONE. n. f. A stone laid to be found at the entrance of the holes in which the eagles make their nests, and affirmed to have a particular virtue in defending the eagle's nest from thunder.
Calmet.

The eaglestone contains, in a cavity within it,
a small loose stone, which rattles when it is shaken; and every fossil, with a nucleus in it, has obtained the name. The analogy between a stone, thus containing another within it, or, as the fanciful writers express it, pregnant with another, and a woman big with child, led people to imagine that it must have great virtues and effects in accelerating or retarding delivery; so that, if tied to the arm of a woman with child, it prevents abortion; and if to the leg, it promotes delivery. On such idle and imaginary virtues was raised all the credit which this famous fossil possessed for many ages. Hill.

If you stop the holes of a hawk's bell it will make no ring, but a flat noise or rattle; and so doth the mites, or eaglestone, which hath a little stone within it. Bacon.

EA'GLET. n. f. [from eagle.] A young eagle.

This treason of his sons did the king express in an emblem, wherein was an eagle with three eaglets tying on her breast, and the fourth picking at one of her eyes. Davies.

EA'GRE. n. f. [ager, in Runick, is the ocean; eggia, in Islandick, is to agitate, to incite.] A tide swelling above another tide, observable in the river Severn.

For as an eagre rides in triumph o'er the tide,
The tyrant passions, hope and fear,
Did in extremes appear,
And bask'd upon the soul with equal force. Dryden.

EA'LDERMAN. n. f. [ealþerþman, Saxon.]
The name of a Saxon magistrate; alderman.

EAME. n. f. [eam, Saxon; eam, Dutch.] Uncle: a word still used in the wilder parts of Staffordshire.

Daughter, says she, fly, fly; behold thy dame
Foretells the treason of thy wretched came!
Fairfax.

EAR. n. f. [eape, Saxon; oor, Dutch.]

1. The whole organ of audition or hearing.
What fire is in my ears? Can this be true?
Stand I condemn'd!
His ears are open unto their cry. Shakspeare.

L'Estrange.

Be not alarmed, as if all religion was falling about our ears. Burnet's Theory.

5. The highest part of a man; the top.
A cavalier was up to the ears in love with a very fine lady. L'Estrange.

6. The privilege of being readily and kindly heard; favour.

Aristippus was earnest suitor to Dionysius for some grant, who would give no ear to his suit; Aristippus fell at his feet, and then Dionysius granted it. Bacon's Aphorisms.

They being told there was small hope of ease,
Were willing at the first to give an ear
To any thing that sounded liberty. Ben Jonson.

If on a pillory, or near a throne,
He gain his prince's ear, or lose his own. Pope.

7. Disposition to like or dislike what is heard; judgment; opinion; taste.

He laid his sense closer, and in fewer words,
according to the style and ear of those times.
Denham.

8. Any prominences from a larger body, raised for the sake of holding it.

Nor bearded ears in fields, nor sands upon the shore. Dryden.

From several grains he had eighty stalks, with very large ears full of large corn. Mortimer.

10. To be by the ears.

To fight;
To fall together by the ears. } to scuffle;
To go together by the ears. } to quarrel.

[In Dutch oorlogen.] A familiar phrase.
Poor naked men belaboured one another with flagged sticks, or dully fell together by the ears at fifty-cuffs. Mere.

Fools go together by the ears, to have knives run away with the flukes. L'Estrange.

All Asia now was by the ears,
And gods beat up for volunteers. Prior.

11. To set by the ears. To make stric;
to make to quarrel: in low language.

A mean rascal sets others together by the ears
without fighting himself. L'Estrange.

She used to carry tales from one to another,
'till she had set the neighbourhood together by the ears. Arbutnot.

It is usual to set these poor animals by the ears.
Addison.

EA'RLLESS. adj. [from ear.] Without any ears.

Earless on high stood unabash'd Desue,
And Tutchin flagrant from the scourge below.
Pope.

cerumen or exudation which smeares the inside of the ear.

The ear being to stand open, because there was some danger that insects might creep in thereat; therefore hath nature located or plastered over the sides of the hole with earwax, to entangle insects. Ray on the Creation.

EA'RWIG. n. f. [eape and pizga, a grub,
Saxon.]

1. A sheath-winged insect; imagined to creep into the ear.

Himself he on an earwig set;
Yet scarce he on his back could get,
So oft and high he did cower. Drayton.
Earwigs and snails seldom infect timber.
Mortimer's Husbandry.

Doll never flies to cut her lace,
Or throw cold water in her face,
Because she heard a sudden drum,
Or found an earwig in a plum. Swift.

2. By way of reproach, a whisperer; a prying informer.

EA'RWITNESS. n. f. [ear and witness.]
One who attests, or can attest, any thing as heard by himself.

All present were made earwitnesses, even of each particular branch of a common indictment.
Hooker.

The histories of mankind, written by eye or earwitnesses, are built upon this principle. Watts.

To EAR. v. a. [aro, Latin.] To plow;
to till. Obsolete.

He that ears my land sows my team, and gives me leave to enjoy the crop. Shakspeare.

ory of an earl; the title and dignity of an earl.

The duke of Clarence having married the heir of the earl of Ulster, and by her having all the earldom of Ulster, carefully went about redressing evils. Spenser on Ireland.

When I am king, claim thou of me
The earldom of Hereford. Shakspeare.

EA'RLINESS. n. f. [from early.] Quickness of any action with respect to something else: as, earliness in the morning, the act of rising soon with respect to the sun; earliness of growth, the act of growing up soon in comparison with other things of the same kind.

The next morning we, having striven with the sun's earliness, were beyond the prospect of the highest towers. Sidney.

The goodness of the crop is great gain, if the goodness answer the earliness of coming up. Bacon.

E A R

EARLY. adj. [syn. Sax. before.] Soon with respect to something else: as, in the morning, with respect to the sun; in time, with respect to creation; in the season, in comparison with other products.

I am a tainted wether of the flock,
Meek'd for death: the weakest kind of fruit
Drops earliest to the ground, and so let me.

Shakespeare.

It is a curiosity to have several fruits upon one tree; and the more when some of them come early and some come late.

Bacon's Nat. Hist.

God made all the world, that he might be worshipped in some parts of the world; and therefore, in the first and most early times of the church, what care did he manifest to have such places erected to his honour?

Smith.

The nymphs, forsaking every cave and spring,
Their early fruit and milk-white turtles bring.

Pope.

Sickness is early old age: it teaches us diffidence in our earthly state, and inspires us with thoughts of a future.

Pope.

Oh foul of honour!

Oh early heroes!

Smith.

EARLY. adv. [from the adjective.] Soon; betime.

Early before the morn, with crimson ray,
The windows of bright heav'n opened had.

Spenser.

None in more languages can show
Those arts, which you so early know.
The prince's makes her issue like herself, by infusing early into their minds religion, virtue, and honour.

Addison.

TO EARN. v. a. [earnian, Saxon.]

1. To gain as the reward or wages of labour, or any performance.

Those that have joined with their honour great perils, are less subject to envy; for men think that they earn their honours hardly.

Bacon.

Winning cheap the high repute,
Which he through hazard huge must earn.

Milton.

I to the evil turn

My obvious breast; aiming to overcome
By suffering, and earn rest from labour won.

Milton.

Men may discern

From what consummate virtue I have chose
This perfect man, by merit call'd my Son,
To earn salvation for the sons of men.

Milton.

Since they all beg, it were better for the state to keep them, even although they earned nothing.

Graunt's Bills of Mortality.

This is the great expence of the poor, that takes up almost all their earnings.
The poems gained the plagiarist wealth, while the author hardly earned his bread by repeating them.

Pope on Homer.

After toiling twenty days,
To earn a stock of pence and praise,
Thy labour's grown the critick's prey.

Swift.

2. To obtain, as a consequence of action.

I can't say where;

It does abhor me, now I speak the word:
To do the act, that might th' addition earn,
Not the world's mists of vanity could make me.

Shakespeare.

EARNEST. adj. [earnert, Saxon.]

1. Ardent in any affection; warm; zealous; importunate.

He which prayeth in due sort, is thereby made the more attentive to hear; and he which hear-eth, the more earnest to pray for the time which we bestow, as well in the one as the other.

Hooker.

2. Intent; fixed; eager.

On that prospect strange
Their earnest eyes they had; imagining,
For one forbidden tree, a multitude
Now ris'n, to work them further woe or shame.

Milton.

E A R

They are never more earnest to disturb us, than when they see us most earnest in this duty.

Duppa.

3. Serious; important. Some lay in earnest, not in jest.

They whom earnest lets do often hinder from being partakers of the whole, have yet this the length of divine service, opportunity for access unto some reasonable part thereof.

Hooker.

EARNEST. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. Seriousness; a serious event, not a jest; reality, not a feigned appearance.

Take heed that this jest do not one day turn to earnest.

Sidney.

I told you Khilus was the hapless wight,
Who earnest found what they account a play.

Sidney.

Therewith she laugh'd, and did her earnest end in jest.

Fairy Queen.

That high All-see, which I dallied with,
Hath turn'd my feigned prayer on my head,
And giv'n in earnest, what I begg'd in jest.

Shakespeare.

Now can I think that God, Creator wife!
Though threat'ning, will in earnest to destroy
Us, his prime creatures.

Milton.

But the main business and earnest of the world is money, dominion and power.

L'Estrange.

We shall die in earnest, and it will not become us to live in jest.

Governments of the Tongue.

Sempronius, you have acted like yourself;
One would have thought you had been half in earnest.

Addison.

2. [earnst, fenge, Danish; arret, French.] Pledge; handiel; first-fruits; token of something of the same kind in futurity.

The apostles term it the handiel or earnest of that which is to come.

Hooker.

Which leader shall the doubtful vict'ry bless,
And give an earnest of the war's success?

Waller.

It may be looked upon as a pledge and earnest of quiet and tranquillity.

Smalridge.

The mercies received, great as they are, were earnests and pledges of greater.

Atterbury.

3. The money which is given in token that a bargain is ratified.

You have conspir'd against our person, Join'd with an enemy proclaim'd, and from his coffers

Receiv'd the golden earnest of our death.

Shakespeare.

Pay back the earnest penny received from Satan,
and sling away his sin.

Decay of Piety.

EARNESTLY. adv. [from earnest.]

1. Warmly; affectionately; zealously; importunately; intensely.

When earnestly they seek

Such proof, conclude they then begun to fail.

Milton.

Shame is a banishment of him from the good opinion of the world, which every man most earnestly desires.

South.

Earnestly invoke the goodness and power of an all-merciful and almighty God.

Smalridge.

2. Eagerly; desirously.

Why so earnestly seek you to put up that letter?

Shakespeare.

My soul, more earnestly releas'd,
Will outstrip her's; as bullets flown before,
A latter bullet may o'ertake, the powder being more.

Donne.

EARNESTNESS. n. f. [from earnest.]

1. Eagerness; warmth; vehemence; impetuosity.

Often with a solemn earnestness,
More than, indeed, belong'd to such a trifle,
He begg'd of me to steal it.

Shakespeare.

Audacity and confidence doth in business so great effects, as a man may doubt, that, besides the very daring and earnestness, and persisting and importunity, there should be some secret binding, and sloping of other mens spirits to such persons.

Bacon's Natural History.

E A R

Marcus is overwarm; his fond complaints
Have so much earnestness and passion in them,
I hear him with a secret kind of horror,
And tremble at his vehemence of temper.

Addison's Cato.

2. Solemnity; zeal; seriousness.

There never was a charge maintained with such a show of gravity and earnestness, which had a slighter foundation to support it.

Atterbury.

3. Solicitude; care; intenseness.

With overdraining, and earnestness of finishing their pieces, they often did them more harm than good.

Dryden.

EARTH. n. f. [from ear, to plow.] A plowed field. Not now in use.

Fires oft are good on barren earths made,
With crackling flames to burn the stubble blade.

May's Virgil.

EARTH. n. f. [eopt, Saxon.]

1. The element distinct from air, fire, or water; soil; terrene matter.

The smiling god is seen; while water, earth,
And air attest his bounty.

Thomson.

2. The terraqueous globe; the world.

Nought so vile that on the earth doth live,
But to the earth some special good doth give.

Shakespeare.

This solid globe we live upon is called the earth; which word, taken in a more limited sense, signifies such parts of this globe as are capable, being exposed to the air, to give rooting and nourishment to plants, so that they may stand and grow in it.

Locke.

3. Different modification of terrene matter.
In this sense it has a plural.

The five genera of earths are, 1. Boles. 2.
Clays. 3. Marls. 4. Ochres. 5. Tripelias.

Hill's Mat. Medica.

Earths are opaque, insipid, and, when dried,
friable, or consisting of parts easy to separate,
and soluble in water; not disposed to burn, flame,
or take fire.

Woodward.

4. This world opposed to other scenes of existence.

What are these,
So wither'd, and so wild in their attire,
That look not like th' inhabitants o' th' earth,
And yet are on't?

Shakespeare's King Lear.

They can judge as fitly of his worth,
As I can of those mysteries which heav'n
Will not have earth to know.

Shakespeare.

5. The inhabitants of the earth.

The whole earth was of one language.

Genesis.

6. Country; distinct region.

In ten fer battles have we driven back
These heathen Saxons, and regain'd our earth,
As earth recovers from the ebbing tide.

Dryden.

7. The act of turning up the ground in tillage. [from ear, to plow.]

Such land as ye break up for barley to sow,
Two earths, at the least, ere ye sow it, bestow.

Tusser.

nificent. Drummond.

EA'RTHLY. adj. [from earth.]

1. Not heavenly; vile; mean; sordid.

But I remember now
I'm in this earthly world, where to do harm
Is often laudable; to do good, sometime Accounted dangerous folly. Shaksp. Macbeth.
When faith and love, which parted from thee never,

Had ripen'd thy just soul to dwell with God,
Meekly thou didst resign this earthly load
Of death call'd life. Milton.

2. Belonging only to our present state; not spiritual.

Our common necessities, and the lack which we all have as well of ghostly as of earthly favours, is in each kind easily known. Hooker.

You have scarce time
To steal from spiritual leisure a brief span,
To keep your earthly audit. Shakespeare.

It must be our solemn business and endeavour, at fit seasons, to turn the stream of our thoughts from earthly towards divine objects. Atterbury.

3. Corporeal; not mental.

Great grace that old man to him given had,
For God he often saw, from heaven sight,
All were his earthly eyes both blunt and bad. Spenser.

Sudden he view'd, in spite of all her art,
An earthly lover lurking at her heart. Pope.

4. Any thing in the world: a female hyperbole

Oh! if to dance all night, and dress all day,
Charm'd the small-pox, or chas'd old-age away,
Who would not scorn what housewife's cares produce? Pope.

Or who would learn one earthly thing of use?

EA'RTHNUT. n. f. [earth and nut.] A pignut; a root in shape and size like a nut.

Where there are earthenuts in several patches, though the roots lie deep in the ground, and the stalks be dead, the swine will by their scent root only where they grow. Ray.

EA'RTHQUAKE. n. f. [earth and quake.]

Tremour or convulsion of the earth.

This subterranean heat or fire being in any part of the earth stop'd, by some accidental glut or obstruction in the passages through which it used to ascend, and being preternaturally assembled in greater quantity into one place, causes a great rarefaction and intumescence of the water of the abyss, putting it into very great commotions; and making the like effort upon the earth, expanded upon the face of the abyss, occasions that agitation and concussion which we call an earthquake. Woodward's Natural History.

These tumults were like an earthquake, shaking the very foundations of all, than which nothing in the world hath more of horror. King Charles.

Was it his youth, his valour, or success,
These might perhaps be found in other men:
'Twas that respect, that awful homage paid me;
That fearful love which trembled in his eyes,
And with a silent earthquake shook his soul. Dryden.

The country, by reason of its vast caverns and subterraneous fires, has been miserably torn by earthquakes, so that the whole face of it is quite changed. Addison on Italy.

EA'RTHSHAKING. adj. [earth and shake.]

Having power to shake the earth, or to raise earthquakes.

By the earthshaking Neptune's mace,
And Tethys grave majestic pace. Milton.
Now scarce withdrawn the fierce earthshaking
pow'r,

Jove's daughter Pallas watch'd the fav'ring hour;
Back to their caves she bade the winds to fly,
And hush'd the blust'ring brethren of the sky. Pope.

EA'RTHWORM. n. f. [earth and worm.]

1. A worm bred under ground.

Worms are found in snow commonly, like earthworms, and therefore it is not unlike that it may likewise put forth plants. Bacon.

Upon a shower, after a draught, earthworms and landsnails innumerable come out of their lurking places. Ray.

2. A mean sordid wretch.

Thy vain contempt, dull earthworm, cease;
I won't for refuge fly. Norris.

EA'RTHY. adj. [from earth.]

1. Consisting of earth.

Long may'st thou live in Richard's seat to sit,
And soon lie Richard in an earthy pit! Shakespeare.

Lamps are inflamed by the admission of new air, when the sepulchres are opened, as we see in fat earthy vapours of divers sorts. Withins.

All water, especially that of rain, is stored with matter, light in comparison of the common earthy matter. Woodward.

2. Composed or partaking of earth; ter-rene.

To survey his dead and earthy image,
What were it but to make my sorrow greater. Shakespeare.

Him lord pronounce'd, he, O indignity!
Subjected to his service angel-wings,
And flaming ministers to watch and tend
Their earthy charge. Milton's Paradise Lost.

3. Inhabiting the earth; terrestrial.

Those earthy spirits black and envious are;
I'll call up other gods of form more fair. Dryden.

4. Relating to earth.

Mine is the shipwreck, in a watry sign;
And in an earthy, the dark dungeon thine. Dryden.

5. Not mental; gross; not refined.

Teach me, dear creature, how to think and speak;

Lay open to my earthy gross conceit,
Smother'd in errors, feeble, shallow, weak,
The folded meaning of your words deceit. Shakespeare.

Not is my flame

So earthy, as to need the dull material force
Of eyes, or lips, or cheeks. Denham's Sophy.

EASE. n. f. [aïse, French.]

1. Quiet; rest; undisturbed tranquillity; not solitude.

We should not find her half so brave and bold

To lead it to the wars and to the seas;
To make it suffer watchings, hunger, cold,
When it might feed with plenty, rest with ease. Dorville.

The priest on skins of off'ring takes his ease,
And nightly visions in his slumber sees. Dryden's Æneas.

2. Freedom from pain; a neutral state between pain and pleasure.

That which we call ease is only an indolency, or a freedom from pain. L'Étranger.

Is it a small crime to wound himself by anguish of heart, to deprive himself of all the pleasures, or eases, or enjoyments of life? Temple.

3. Rest after labour; intermission of labour.

Give yourselves ease from the fatigue of waiting. Swift.

4. Facility; not difficulty.

The willing metal will obey thy hand,
Following with ease, if favour'd by thy fate,
Thou art foredoom'd to view the Stygian state;
If not, no labour can the tree constrain,
And strength of stubborn arms and steel are vain. Dryden.

5. Unconstraint; freedom from harshness, formality, forced behaviour, or con-ceits.

True ease in writing comes from art, not chance;

As those move easiest who have learn'd to dance. Pope.

6. At EASE. In a state of undisturbed leisure; without pain; without anxiety.

Lucan, content with praise, may lie at ease,
In costly grots and marble palaces. Dryden.

Men of parts and penetration were not idly to dispute at their ease, but were to act according to the result of their debates. Locke.

No body is under an obligation to know every thing: knowledge and science in general is the business only of those who are at ease and leisure. Locke.

To EASE, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To free from pain.

Help and ease children the best you can; but by no means bemoan them. Locke.

2. To assuage; to mitigate; to alleviate.

Thy father made our yoke grievous, now therefore ease thou somewhat the grievous servitude. 2 Chron.

Complain, queen Margaret, and tell thy grief;
It shall be eas'd, if France can yield relief. Shakespeare.

As if with sports my sufferings I could ease. Dryden.

Though he speaks of such medicines as procure sleep, and ease pain, he doth not determine their doses. Arbutnot.

Will he for sacrifice our sorrows ease?
And can our tears reverse his firm decrees? Prior.

3. To relieve from labour, or any thing that offends; with of before the thing.

E A S

If ere night the gathering clouds we fear,
A song will help the beating storm to bear;
And that thou may'st not be too late abroad
Sing, and I'll ease thy shoulders of thy load.

Dryden.

I will ease me of mine adversaries.
No body feels pain that he withes not to be eased of, with a desire equal to that pain, and inseparable from it.

Isaiah.

Locke.

EASEFUL. adj. [from ease and full.] Quiet;
peaceable; fit for rest.

I spy a black, suspicious, threat'ning cloud,
That will encounter with our glorious sun,
Ere he attain his easy western bed.

Shaksp.

EASEMENT. n. f. [from ease.]

1. Affluence; support; relief from ex-pences.

He has the advantage of a free lodging, and some other easements.

Swift.

2. [In law.] A service that one neighbour has of another by charter or prescription, without profit; as a way through his ground, a sink, or such like.

Cowell.

EASILY. adv. [from easy.]

1. Without difficulty.

Sounds move swiftly, and at great distance;
but they require a medium well disposed, and their transmission is easily stopped.

Bacon.

She ask'd the reason of his woe;

She ask'd, but with an air and mien

That made it easily foreseen

She fear'd too much to know.

Prior.

2. Without pain; without disturbance; in tranquillity.

Is it not to bid defiance to all mankind to condemn their universal opinions and designs, if, instead of passing your life as well and easily, you resolve to pass it as ill and as miserable as you can?

Temple.

3. Readily; without reluctance.

I can easily resign to others the praise of your illustrious family.

Dryden's Ded. to State of Innoc.

Not won provok'd, the easily forgives;

And much she suffers, as the much believes.

Prior.

EASINESS. n. f. [from easy.]

1. Freedom from difficulty.

Believe me, friends, loud tumults are not laid
With half the easiness that they are rais'd.

Ben Jonson

Easiness and difficulty are relative terms, and relate to some power; and a thing may be difficult to a weak man, which yet may be easy to the same person, when assisted with a greater strength.

Tillotson.

The seeming easiness of Pindarick verse has made it spread; but it has not been considered.

Dryden.

You left a conquest more than half achiev'd,
And for whose easiness I almost griev'd.

This plea, under a colour of friendship to religion, invites men to it by the easiness of the terms it offers.

Rogers.

2. Flexibility; compliance; readiness; not opposition; not reluctance.

His yielding unto them in one thing might happily put them in hope, that time would breed the like easiness of condescending further unto them.

Hooker.

Since the custom of easiness to alter and change laws is so evil, no doubt but to bear a tolerable fore is better than to venture on a dangerous remedy.

Hooker.

Give to him, and he shall but laugh at your easiness; save his life, but, when you have done, look to your own.

South.

The safest way to secure honesty, is to lay the foundations of it early in liberality, and an easiness to part with to others whatever they have or like themselves.

Locke.

3. Freedom from constraint; not effort;
not formality.

E A S

Abstruse and my sick thoughts you must express
With painful care, but seeming easiness;
For truth shines brightest through the plainest drefs.

Roscommon.

4. Rest; tranquillity; ease; freedom from pain.

I think the reason I have assigned hath a great interest in that rest and easiness we enjoy when asleep.

Ray.

EAST. n. f. [corrupt, Saxon; beas, Erse.]

1. The quarter where the sun rises: opposite to the west.

They counting forwards towards the east, did allow 180 degrees to the Portugals eastward.

Abbot.

2. The regions in the eastern parts of the world.

I would not be the villain that thou thinkest
For the whole space that 's in the tyrant's grasp,
And the rich east to boot.

The gorgeous east, with richest hand,

Pours on her kings barbarick, pearl and gold.

Milton.

EASTER. n. f. [earstne, Saxon; oester, Dutch.] The day on which the Christian church commemorates our Saviour's resurrection.

Didst thou not fall out with a taylor for wearing his new doublet before Easter?

Victor's unbrother-like heat towards the eastern churches, in the controversy about Easter, fomented that difference into a schism.

Deasy of Pity.

EASTERLING. n. f. [from east.]

1. A native of some country eastward to another.

He oft in battle vanquished
Those spoilful, rich, and swarming Easterlings.

Spenser.

2. A species of waterfowl.

EASTERLY. adj. [from east.]

1. Coming from the parts toward the east.

When the easterly winds or breezes are kept off by some high mountains from the valleys, whereby the air, wanting motion, doth become exceeding unhealthy.

Raleigh.

2. Lying toward the east.

These give us a view of the most easterly, southerly, and westerly parts of England.

Graunt.

3. Looking toward the east.

Water he chuses clear, light, without taste or smell, drawn from springs with an easterly exposition.

Arbutnot.

EASTERN. adj. [from east.]

1. Dwelling or found in the east; oriental.
Like eastern kings a lazy state they keep.

Pope.

Eastern tyrants from the light of heaven.

Seclude their bosom slaves.

Thomson.

2. Lying or being toward the east.

The eastern end of the Isle rises up in precipices.

Addison.

3. Going toward the east.

A ship at sea has no certain method in either her easterly or western voyages, or even in her less distant sailing from the coasts, to know her longitude, or how much she is gone eastward or westward, as can easy be known in any clear day or night how much she is gone northward or southward.

Addison.

4. Looking toward the east.

Th' angel caught
Our ling'ring parents, and to th' eastern gate
Led them direct.

Milton.

EASTWARD. adv. [from east and toward.]

Toward the east.

The moon, which performs its motion swifter than the sun, gets eastward out of his rays, and appears when the sun is set.

Brown.

What shall we do, or where direct our flight?

E A T

Eastward, as far as I could cast my sight,
From op'ning heav'ns, I saw descending light.

Dryden.

EAT. adj. [from ease.]

1. Not difficult.

The service of God, in the solemn assembly of saints, is a work, though easy, yet withal very weighty, and of great respect.

Hooker.

How much is it in every one's power to make resolutions to himself, such as he may keep, is easy for every one to try.

Locke.

2. Not causing difficulty.

The whole island was probably cut into several easy ascents, and planted with variety of palaces.

Addison on Italy.

3. Quiet; at rest; not harassed; unmolested; secure; not anxious.

Those that are easy in their conditions, or their minds, refuse often to enter upon publick charges or employment.

Temple.

Keep your thoughts easy and free, the only temper wherein the mind is capable of receiving new informations.

Locke.

A marriage of love is pleasant, a marriage of interest easy, and a marriage where both meet happy.

Addison's Spectator.

When men are easy in their circumstances,
they are naturally enemies to innovations.

Addison's Freeholder.

A man should direct all his studies and endeavours at making himself easy now, and happy hereafter.

Addison's Spectator.

We plainly feel whether at this instant we are easy or uneasy, happy or miserable.

Smalbridge.

4. Free from pain.

Bold adventure to discover wide
That dismal world, if any clime perhaps Might yield them easier habitation.

Milton.

Pleasure has been the business of my life,
And every change of fortune easy to me,
Because I still was easy to myself.

Dryden.

5. Complying; unresisting; credulous.

Baited with reasons not unpalatable,

Win me into the easy hearted man,

And hug him into inares.

Milton.

With such deceits he gain'd their easy hearts,

Too prone to credit his perfidious arts.

Dryden.

The kindest father I have ever found him,

Easy and good, and bounteous to my wishes.

Addison's Cato.

6. Ready; not unwilling.

Pity and he are one;

So merciful a king did never live,

Loth to revenge, and easy to forgive.

Dryden.

7. Free from want of more.

They should be allowed each of them such a rent as would make them easy.

Swift.

8. Not constrained; not formal.

Those move easy that have learn'd to dance.

Pope.

Praise the easy vigour of a line,
Where Denham's strength, and Walker's sweetness join.

Pope.

TO EAT. v. a. preterit ate, or eat;
part. eat, or eaten. [etan, Saxon; ean, Gothick; rieb, Erse.]

1. To devour with the mouth.

Locusts shall eat the residue of that which is escaped from the hail, and shall eat every tree when groweth.

Exodus.

Other states cannot be accused for not staying for the first blow, or for not accepting Polymphe-mus's courtesy, to be the last that shall be eaten up.

Bacon's War with Spain.

Even wormwood, eat with bread, will not bite,
because it is mixed with a great quantity of spittle.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. To consume; to corrode.

Thou best of gold art work of gold;
Others less fine in colour is more precious,
Preserving life in medicine putable:

But thou, most fine, most honour'd, most re-nown'd,

Hast eat thy beards up.

Shakspere's Henry iv.

E A T

They entail a secret curse upon their estates, which does either insensibly waste and consume
it, or eat out the heart and comfort of it.

Tillotson.

Eating cars,
Lydian airs.

Milton.

There arises a necessity of keeping the surface even, either by pressure or eating medicines, that the eminence of the flesh may not resist the fibres of the skin in their tendency to cover the wound.

Sharp's Surgery.

3. To swallow back; to retract. This is only used of a man's word.

They cannot hold, but burst out those words, which afterwards they are forced to eat.

Hakewill on Providence.

Credit were not to be lost

Of a brave knight errant of the post,
That eats, perfidiously, his word,
And swears his ears through a two inch board.

Hudibras.

To Eat. v. n.

4. To go to meals; to take meals; to feed.

He did eat continually at the king's table.

2 Samuel.

And when the scribes and pharisees saw him eat with publicans and sinners, they said unto his disciples, How is it that he eateth with publicans and sinners?

Matthew.

5. To take food.

He that will not eat till he has a demonstration that it will nourish him, he that will not till he infallibly knows the business he goes about will succeed, will have little else to do but sit still and perish.

Locke.

6. To be maintained in food.

The righteous eateth to the satisfying of his soul, but the belly of the wicked shall want.

Proverbs.

Thou art past the tyrant's stroke;
Care no more to slay and eat.

Shaksp. Cymb.

But, thanks to my indulgent stars, I eat,
Since I have found the secret to be great.

Prior.

7. To make way by corrosion.

The plague of sin has even altered his nature,
and eaten into his very essentials.

South.

A prince's court eats too much into the income of a poor state.

Addison's Italy.

Eatable. adj. [from eat.] That may be eaten.

Eatable. n. f. Any thing that may be eaten.

If you all sorts of persons would engage,
Suit well your eatables to ev'ry age.

King.

Eater. n. f. [from eat.]

1. One that eats any thing.

The Caribees and the Cannibals, almost all,
are eaters of man's flesh.

Abbot.

A knave, a rascal, an eater of broken meats.

Shakspere.

If the taste of this fruit maketh the eaters like gods, why remainest thou a beast?

Brown.

As if the lusus grew only here, the virtue of whose fruit is to cause in the eaters an oblivion of all other joys.

Howell.

2. A corrosive.

EATH. adj. [eat, Saxon.] Easy; not difficult. An old word.

Where ease abounds, it's eath to do amiss.

Fairy Queen.

What works not beauty, man's relenting mind

Is eath to move with plaints and shews of woe.

Fairfax

The way was strait and eath.

Fairfax

EATH. adv. [from the adjective.] Easily. An old word.

Who hath the world not try'd,
From the right way full eath may wander wide.

Hubbard's Tale

EBB

EATINGHOUSE. n. f. [eat and house.] A house where provisions are sold ready dressed.

An hungry traveller slept into an eatinghouse for his dinner.

L'Estrange.

EAVES. n. f. [eape, Saxon.] The edges of the roof which overhang the house.

Every night he comes

With musick of all sorts, and songs compos'd
To her unworthiness: it nothing steals us

To chide him from our eaves; for he persists,
As if his life lay on't.

Shakspere.

His tears run down his beard, like winter drops

From eaves of reeds.

Shakspere's Temp.

If in the beginning of winter the drops of the eaves of houses come more slowly down than they use, it portendeth a hard and frosty winter.

Boon.

Usher'd with a shower still,

When the gulf hath blown his fill,

Ending on the rustling leaves,

With minute drops from off the eaves.

Milton.

The icicles hang down from the eaves of houses.

Woodward

To EAVESDROP. v. g. [eaves and drop.]

To catch what comes from the eaves;
in common phrase, to listen under windows.

EAVESDROPPER. n. f. [eaves and drop.]

A listener under windows; an insidious listener.

Under our tents I'll play the eavesdropper,

To hear if any mean to shrink from me.

Shakspere.

EBB. n. f. [ebba, epplob, Saxon; ebbe,
Dutch.]

1. The reflux of the tide toward the sea:
opposed to flow.

The clear sun on his wide wat'ry glass

Gaz'd hot, and of the fresh wave largely drew,
As alter thir; which made their flowing shrink

From standing like to tripping ebb, that stole
With soft foot towards the deep.

Milton.

Hither the seas at stated times resort,

And thence the laden vessels into port:

Then with a gentle ebb retire again,

And render back their cargo to the main.

Addison on Italy.

2. Decline; decay; waste.

You have finished all the war, and brought all things to that low ebb which you speak of.

Spenser on Ireland.

This tide of man's life, after it once turneth and declineth, ever runneth with a perpetual ebb and falling stream, but never floweth again.

Raleigh's History.

Thus a'l the treasure of our flowing years,
Our ebb of life for ever takes away.

Roscommon.

The greatest age for poetry was that of August-us Cæsar, yet painting was then at its lowest ebb, and perhaps sculpture was also declining.

Dryden.

Near my apartment let him pris'ner be,
That I his hourly ebbs of life may see.

What is it he aspires to?

Is it not this? To shed the flow remains.

His last poor ebb of blood in your defence.

Addison's Cato.

To Ebb. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To flow back toward the sea: opposed to flow.

Though my tide of blood

Hath proudly flow'd in vanity till now,

Now it doth turn and ebb back to the sea.

Shakspere.

From thence the tide of fortune left thee, thence,
And ebb'd much faster than it flow'd before.

Dryden's Æn.

2. To decline; to decay; to waste.

Well, I am standing water:

—I'll teach you how to flow.

ECC

—Do so: to ebb

Hereditary sloth instructs me. Shaksp. Temp.

But oh, he ebbs! the smiling waves decay!

For ever lovely stream, for ever stay! Halifax.

E'BN. } n. f. [ebenus, Latin.] A hard,
E'BN. } heavy, black, valuable wood,
E'BNY. } which admits a fine gloss.

If the wood be very hard, as ebony, or lignum vitæ, they are to turn: they use not the same tools they do for soft woods.

Marx.

Off by the winds extinct the signal lies,
Ere night has half roll'd round her ebon throne.

Gey.

EBRIETY. n. f. [ebrietas, Latin.] Drunkenness; intoxication by strong liquors.

Bitter almonds, as an antidote against ebriety, hath commonly failed.

Brown's Vul. Err.

EBRILLADE. n. f. [French.] A check of the bridle which a horseman gives a horse, by a jerk of one rein, when he refuses to turn.

EBRIOSITY. n. f. [ebrietas, Latin.]
Habitual drunkenness.

That religion which excuseth Noah in surprisal, will neither acquit ebriety nor ebriety in their intended perversion.

Brown.

EBULLITION. n. f. [ebullio, Latin.]

1. The act of boiling up with heat.

2. Any intestine motion.

The dissolution of gold and silver disagree; so that in their mixture there is great ebullition, darkness, and, in the end, a precipitation of a black powder.

Bacon.

Iron, in aqua fortis, will fall into ebullition with noise and emication; as also a craze and fumed exhalation, caused from the combat of the sulphur of iron with the acid and nitrous spirits of aqua fortis.

Brown's Vul. Err.

3. That struggling or effervescence which arises from the mingling together any alkaliate and acid liquor; any intestine violent motion of the parts of a fluid, occasioned by the struggling of particles of different properties.

Quincy.

When aqua fortis, or spirit of vitriol, poured upon filings of iron, dissolves the filings with a great heat and ebullition, is not the heat and ebullition effected by a violent motion of the parts; and does not their motion argue, that the acid parts of the liquor rush towards the parts of the metal with violence, and run forcibly into its pores, till they get between its outmost particles and the main mass of the metal?

A violent cold, as well as heat, may be produced by this ebullition; for if sal ammoniac, or any pure volatile alkali, dissolved in water, be mixed with an acid, an ebullition, with a greater degree of cold, will ensue.

Airbathnat.

ECCENTRICAL. } adj. [eccentricus, ECCENTRICK. } Latin.]

1. Deviating from the centre.

2. Not having the same centre with another circle: such circles were supposed by the Ptolemaick philosophy.

Astronomers, to solve the phenomena, framed to their conceit eccentricicks and epicycles, and a wonderful engine of orbs.

Bacon.

Thither his course he bends

Through the calm firmament; but up or down,
By centrick or eccentric, hard to tell.

Milton.

They build, unbuild, contrive,

To save appearances: they gird the sphere

With centrick and eccentric, scribbled o'er,

Cycle and epicycle, orb in orb.

Milton.

Whence is it that planets move all one and the same way in orbs concentrick, while comets move all manner of ways in orbs very eccentric?

Newton's Opticks.

3. Not terminating in the same point;
not directed by the same principle.

Whatsoever affairs pass such a man's hands, he crooketh them to his own ends; which must needs be often eccentric to the ends of his master.

Bacon's Essays.

4. Irregular; anomalous; deviating from stated and constant methods.

This motion, like others of the times, seems eccentric and irregular.

King Charles.

A character of an eccentric virtue, is the more exact image of human life, because it is not wholly exempted from its frailties.

Dryden.

Then from what'er we can to sense produce, Common and plain, or wond'rous and abstruse, From nature's constant or eccentric laws, The thoughtful soul this gen'ral inference draws, That an effect must presuppose a cause.

Prior.

ECCENTRICITY. n. f. [from eccentric.]

1. Deviation from a centre.
2. The state of having a different centre from another circle.

In regard of eccentricity, and the epicycle wherein it moveth, the motion of the moon is unequal.

Brown.

By reason of the sun's eccentricity to the earth, and obliquity to the equator, he appears to us to move unequally.

Holder.

3. Excursion from the proper orb.

The duke at his return from his eccentricity, for so I account favourites abroad, met no good news.

Wotton.

4. Eccentricity of the earth is the distance between the focus and the centre of the earth's elliptick orbit.

Harris.

ECCHYMOSIS. n. f. [εκχυμωσις.] Livid spots or blotches in the skin, made by extravasated blood.

Quincy.

Eccymosis may be defined an extravasation of the blood in or under the skin, the skin remaining whole.

Wifeman.

Laxations are accompanied with tumour and eccymosis.

Wifeman.

ECCLESIASTICAL. } adj. [ecclesiasti- ECCLESIASTICK. } cus, Latin.]
Relating to the church; not civil.

Is discipline an ecclesiastical matter or civil? If an ecclesiastical, it must belong to the duty of the ministers.

Hooker.

Clergymen, otherwise little fond of obscure terms, yet in their sermons are liberal of those which they find in ecclesiastical writers.

Swift.

A church of Englandman has a true veneration for the scheme established among us of ecclesiastick government.

Swift.

ECCLESIASTICK. n. f. [from the adjective.] A person dedicated to the ministrations of religion.

The ambition of the ecclesiasticks destroyed the purity of the church.

Burnet's Theory.

ECCOPROTICKS. n. f. [εκ and πρῶτος.] Such medicines as gently purge the belly, so as to bring away no more than the natural excrements lodged in the intestines.

The body ought to be maintained in its daily excretions by such means as are ecoprotick.

Harvey on the Plague.

ECHINATE. } adj. [from echinus, Lat.]
ECHINATED. } Bristled like a hedgehog; set with prickles.

An echinated pyrites in shape approaches the echinated crystalline balls.

Woodward on Fossils.

1. A hedge-hog.
2. A shellfish set with prickles.
3. [With botanists.] The prickly head, cover of the seed, or top of any plant.
4. [In architecture.] A member or ornament, taking its name from the roughness of the carving, resembling the prickly rind of a chestnut, and not unlike the thorny coat of a hedge-hog.

This ornament is used by modern architects in cornices of the Ionick, Corinthian, and Composite orders; and generally set next to the abacus, being carved with anchors, darts, and ovals or eggs.

Harris.

E'CHO. n. f. [ἠχώ; echo, Latin.]

1. Echo was supposed to have been once a nymph, who pined into a sound for love of Narcissus.

The pleasant myrtle may teach th' unfortunate Echo

In these woods to resound the renowned name of a goddess.

Sidney.

2. The return or repercussion of any sound.

The sound, filling great spaces in arched lines, cannot be guided; therefore there hath not been any means to make artificial echoes.

Bacon's Natural History.

3. The sound returned.

Babbling echo mocks the hounds,
Replying thrilly to the well-tun'd horns,
As if a double hunt were heard at once.

Shakespeare.

Wilt thou hunt?

Thy hounds shall make the welkin answer them,
And fetch shrill echoes from their hollow earth.

Shakespeare.

O woods, O fountains, hillocks, dales and bow'rs!

With other echo late I taught your shades
To answer, and resound far other song!

Milton.

To you I mourn, nor to the deaf I sing;
The woods shall answer, and the echo ring.

Pope.

'Tis not enough no harshness gives offence;
The sound must seem an echo to the sense.

Pope.

To E'CHO. v. n.

1. To resound; to give the repercussion of a voice.

At the parting

All the church echo'd. Shaksp. Taming of Shrew.
Through rocks and caves the name of Delia

sounds;

Delia each cave and echoing rock rebounds.

Pope.

2. To be sounded back.

Hark, how the sound disturbs imperious Rome!

Shakes her proud hills, and rolls from dome to dome!

Her mitred princes hear the echoing noise,
And, Albion, dread thy wrath and awful voice.

Blackmore.

To E'CHO. v. a. To send back a voice; to return what has been uttered.

Our separatists do but echo the same note.

Decay of Piety.

With peals of shouts the Tyrians praise the song;

Those peals are echo'd by the Trojan throng.

Dryden's Æneid.

One great death deforms the dreary ground;

The echo'd woes from distant rocks resound.

Prior.

ECLAIRCISSEMENT. n. f. [French.]

Explanation; the act of clearing up an affair by verbal expostulation.

The claircissement ended in the discovery of the informer.

Clarendon.

ECLAT. n. f. [French.] Splendour; show; lustre.

Nothing more contributes to the variety, surprise, and eclat of Homer's battles, than that artificial manner of gaging his heroes by each other.

Pope's Essay on Homer.

ECLIP'TICK. adj. [εκλειπτικός.] Selecting; choosing at will.

Cicero was of the ecliptick sect, and chose out of each such positions as came nearest truth.

Watts on the Blind.

ECLIP'TICKA. n. f. [εκ and λήξις.] A form of medicine made by the incorporation of oils with syrups, and which is to be taken upon a liquorice stick. Quincy.

ECLIPSE. n. f. [εκλειψις.]

1. An obscuration of the luminaries of heaven: the sun is eclipsed by the intervention of the moon; the moon by the interposition of the earth. The word originally signifies departure from the place, to which Milton alludes.

Sips of yew,

Shiver'd in the moon's eclipse. Shakespeare.

Planets, planet-struck, real eclipse

Then suffer'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

So though the sun victorious be,

And from a dark eclipse let free,

The influence, which we fondly fear,

Attends our thoughts the following year. Waller.

An eclipse of the moon is when the atmosphere of the earth, between the sun and the moon, hinders the light of the sun from falling upon and being reflected by the moon: if the light of the sun is kept off from the whole body of the moon, it is a total eclipse; if from a part only, it is a partial one.

Locke.

2. Darkness; obscuration.

All the posterity of our first parents suffered a perpetual eclipse of spiritual life.

Raleigh.

Experience we have of the vanity of human glory, in our scatterings and eclipses.

King Ch.

To ECLIPSE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To darken a luminary.

Let the eclipsed moon her throne resign.

Sandys.

Now if the earth were flat, the dark'n'd moon
Would seem to all eclips'd as well as one. Cresch.

2. To extinguish; to put out.

Then here I take my leave of thee, fair son,
Born to eclipse thy life this afternoon.

Shaksp.

3. To cloud; to obscure.

They had seen tokens of more than common greatness, howsoever now eclipsed with fortune.

Sidney.

Praise him to his father:—

—Let the prince's glory
Seem to eclipse, and cast a cloud on his.

Dunkan's Sophy.

Let other muses write his prosperous fate,
Of conquer'd nations tell, and kings restor'd;

But mine shall sing of his eclips'd estate,
Which, like the sun's, more wonders does afford.

Dryden.

He descended from his Father, and eclipsed the glory of his divine majesty with a veil of flesh.

Calamy's Sermons.

4. To disgrace.

She told the king, that her husband was eclipsed in Ireland by the no-countenance his majesty had shewed towards him.

Clarendon.

Another now hath to himself engros'd

All pow'r, and us eclips'd. Milton's Par. L.

ECLIP'TICK. n. f. [εκλειπτικός.] A great circle of the sphere, supposed to be drawn through the middle of the zodiack, and making an angle with the equinoctial, in the points of Aries and Libra, of 23°.

30'. which is the sun's greatest declination. This is by some called via solis, or the way of the sun, because the sun, in his annual motion, never deviates from this line.

This line is drawn on the globe: but in the new astronomy the ecliptick is that part among the fixed stars, which the earth appears to describe to an eye placed in the sun, as in its annual motion it runs round the sun from west to east. If you suppose this circle to be divided into twelve equal parts, they will be the twelve signs. Harris.

All stars that have their distance from the ecliptick northwards not more than twenty-three degrees and a half, may, in progression of time, have declination southward, and move beyond the equator. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The terraqueous globe had the same site and position, in respect of the sun, that it now hath: its axis was not parallel to that of the ecliptick, but inclined in like manner as it is at present. Woodward's Natural History.

You must conceive an imaginary plane, which, passing through the centre of the sun and the earth, extends itself on all sides as far as the firmament: this plane is called the ecliptick, and in this the centre of the earth is perpetually carried, without any deviation. Bentley.

ECLIP'TICK. adj. Described by the ecliptick line.

The earth's rotation makes the night and day; The sun revolving through th' ecliptick way, Effects the various seasons of the year. Blackmore.

E'CLOGUE. n. f. [eclogia.] A pastoral poem, so called because Virgil called his pastorals eclogues.

What exclaiming praises Basilus gave this eclogue any man may guess, that knows love is better than spectacles to make every thing seem great. Sidney.

It is not sufficient that the sentences be brief, the whole eclogue should be so too. Pope.

ECONOMICK. } adj. [from economy.]
ECONOMICAL. }

1. Pertaining to the regulation of a household.

Her quick'ning power in every living part,
Doth as a nurse, or as a mother serve;
And doth employ her economick art,
And busy care, her household to preserve. Davies.

In economical affairs, having proposed the government of a family, we consider the proper means to effect it. Watts.

2. Frugal.

Some are so plainly economical, as even to desire that the seat be well watered, and well swelled. Watson's Architect.

ECONOMY. n. f. [oikonomia.] This word is often written, from its derivation, economy; but e being no diphthong in English, it is placed here with the authorities for different orthography.]

1. The management of a family; the government of a household.

By St. Paul's economy the heir differs nothing from a servant, while he is in his minority; so a servant should differ nothing from a child in the substantial part. Taylor.

2. Distribution of expence.

Particular sums are not laid out to the greatest advantage in his economy; but are sometimes suffered to run waste, while he is only careful of the main. Dryden.

3. Frugality; discretion of expence; laudable parsimony.

I have no other notion of economy, than that it is the parent of liberty and ease. Swift.

4. Disposition of things; regulation.

All the divine and infinitely wise ways of economy that God could use towards a rational creature, oblige mankind to that course of living which is most agreeable to our nature. Hammond.

5. The disposition or arrangement of any work.

In the Greek poets, as in Plautus, we see the economy and disposition of poems better observed than in Terence. Ben Jonson.

If this economy must be observed in the minutest parts of an epic poem, what soul, though sent into the world with great advantages of nature, cultivated with the liberal arts and sciences, can be sufficient to inform the body of so great a work? Dryden's Dedication to St. Edmund.

6. System of matter; distribution of every thing active or passive to its proper place.

These the stainers aid,
That by a constant separation made,
They may a due economy maintain,
Exclude the noxious parts, the good retain. Blackmore.

ECPHRACTICKS. n. f. [ex and ephractikos.]

Such medicines as render tough humours more thin, so as to promote their discharge. Quincy.

Procure the blood a free course, ventilation, and transpiration, by suitable purges and ecphractick medicines. Harvey.

ECSTASY. n. f. [ecstasy.]

1. Any passion by which the thoughts are absorbed, and in which the mind is for a time lost.

Follow them swiftly,
And hinder them from what this ecstasy
May now provoke them to. Shaksp. Tempest.

'T may be
No longer joy there, but an ecstasy. Suckling.
Whether what we call ecstasy be not dreaming
With our eyes open, I leave to be examined. Locke.

2. Excessive joy; rapture.

O, love, be moderate! allay thy ecstasy! Shaksp. Measure for Measure.

The religious pleasure of a well-disposed mind moves gently, and therefore constantly: it does not affect by rapture and ecstasy; but is like the pleasure of health, still and sober. Smith.

Each delighted, and delighting gives
The pleasing ecstasy which each receives. Prior.

A pleasure which no language can express;
An ecstasy, that mothers only feel,
Plays round my heart. Philips' Distress Mother.

3. Enthusiasm; excessive elevation and absorption of the mind.

He lov'd me well, and oft would beg me
sing;
Which when I did, he on the tender grass
Would sit, and harken even to ecstasy. Milton.

4. Excessive grief or anxiety. This is not now used.

Sighs and groans, and shrieks that rend the
air,
Are made, not mark'd; where violent sorrow seems.

A modern ecstasy. Shaksp. Macbeth.

Better be with the dead,
Than on the torture of the mind to lie
In restless ecstasy. Shaksp. Macbeth.

5. Madness; distraction. This sense is not now in use.

Now see that noble and most sovereign reason,
Like sweet bells jangled out of tune, and harsh,
That unmatch'd form, and feature of blown youth,
Blasted with ecstasy. Shaksp. Hamlet.

ECSTASIED. adj. [from ecstasy.] Ravished; filled with enthusiasm.

These are as common to the inanimate things as to the most ecstasied soul upon earth. Norris.

ECSTA'TICAL. } adj. [ecstasios.]
ECSTA'TICK. }

1. Ravished; rapturous; elevated beyond the usual bounds of nature.

There doth my soul in holy vision sit,
In pensive trance, and anguish, and ecstasied fit. Milton.

When one of them, after an ecstasied manner, fell down before an angel, he was severely rebuked, and bidden to worship God. Stillington.

In trance ecstasied may thy pangs be drown'd;
Bright clouds descend, and angels watch thee round. Pope.

2. Raised to the highest degree of joy.

To gain Pescennius one employs his schemes;
One grasps a Cecrops in ecstasied dreams. Pope.

3. Tending to external objects. This sense is, I think, only to be found once, though agreeable enough to the derivation.

I find in me a great deal of ecstasied love, which continually carries me out to good without myself. Norris.

E'CTYPE. n. f. [ectypa.] A copy.

The complex ideas of substances are ectypes, copies, but not perfect ones; not adequate. Locke.

E'CURIE. n. f. [French; ecurie, Latin.]

A place covered for the lodging or housing of horses.

EDACIOUS. adj. [edax, Latin.] Eating; voracious; devouring; predatory; ravenous; rapacious; greedy.

EDACITY. n. f. [edacitas, Latin.] Voracity; ravenousness; greediness; rapacity.

The wolf is a beast of great edacity and digestion; it may be the parts of him comfort the bowels. Baron.

To EDDER. v. a. [probably from edge.]

To bind or interweave a fence. Not in use.

To add strength to the hedge, edder it; which is, bind the top of the stakes with some small living poles on each side. Mortimer's Husbandry.

E'DDER. n. f. [from the verb.] Such fencewood as is commonly put upon the top of fences. Not in use.

In lopping and felling, save edder and flake,
These hedges, as needeth, to mend or to make. Tupper.

EDDY. n. f. [ed, backward, again, and ea, water, Saxon.]

1. The water that by some repercussion, or opposite wind, runs contrary to the main stream.

My praises are as a bulrush upon a stream: if they sink not, 'tis because they are born up by the strength of the current, which supports their lightness; but they are carried round again, and return on the eddy where they first began. Dryden.

2. Whirlpool; circular motion.

The wild waves master'd him, and suck'd him in,
And smiling eddies dimpled on the main. Dryden.

So, where our wide Numidian wastes extend,
Sudden th' impetuous hurricanes descend,
Wheel through the air, in circling eddies play,
Tear up the sands, and sweep whole plains away. Addison's Cato.

E'DDY. adj. Whirling; moving circularly.

And chaff with eddy winds is whirl'd around,
And dancing leaves are lifted from the ground. Dryden's Virgil.

EDMATOSE. adj. [edema.] Swelling; full of humours; commonly written cedematous.

A serosity obstructing the glands may be watery, edematose, and scurvy, according to the viscosity of the humour. Arbuthnot.

EDN'TATED. adj. [edentatus, Lat.] Deprived of teeth. Dick.

EDGE. n. f. [ecge, Saxon.]

1. The thin or cutting part of a blade.

Seize upon Fife; give to the edge of this sword
His wife, his babes. Shaksp. Macbeth.

He that will a good edge win,
Must forge thick, and grind thin. Proverb.

The edge of war, like an ill-sheathed knife,
No more shall cut his master. Shaksp. Measure for Measure.

'Tis slander,
Whose edge is sharper than the sword. Shaksp.

2. A narrow part rising from a broader.

Some harrow their ground over, and then plow
it upon an edge. Mortimer's Husbandry.

EDG

3. Brink; margin; extremity.

The rays which pass very near to the edges of any body, are bent a little by the action of the body. Newton's Opticks.

We have, for many years, walked upon the edge of a precipice, while nothing but the slender thread of human life has held us from sinking into endless misery. Rogers.

Yes, the last pen for freedom let me draw,
When truth stands trembling on the edge of law. Pope.

4. Sharpness of mind; proper disposition for action or operation; intencensels of desire.

Give him a further edge,
And drive his purpose into these delights. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

But when long time the wretches thoughts
refin'd,
When want had set an edge upon their mind,
Then various cares their working thoughts employ'd,
And that which each invented, all enjoy'd. Cicero's Manil.

Silence and solitude set an edge upon the genius, and cause a greater application. Dryden.

5. Keenness; acrimony of temper.

Abate the edge of traitors, gracious Lord!
That would reduce these bloody days again. Shakespeare's Richard III.

6. To set teeth on Edge. To cause a tingling uneasiness in the teeth.

A harsh grating tune set the teeth on edge. Baron.

To EDGE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To sharpen; to enable to cut.

There sat she rolling her alluring eyes,
To edge her champion's sword, and urge my ruin. Dryden.

2. To furnish with an edge.

I fell'd along a man of bearded face,
His limbs all cover'd with a shining case;
So wond'rous hard, and so secure of wound,
It made my sword, though edg'd with flint, rebound. Dryden.

3. To border with any thing; to fringe.

Their long descending train,
With rubies edg'd, and sapphires, swept the plain. Dryden.

I rid over hanging hills, whose tops were edged with groves, and whose feet were watered with winding rivers. Pope.

4. To exasperate; to embitter.

By such reasonings the simple were blinded,
and the malicious edged. Hayward.
He was indigent and low in money, which perhaps might have a little edged his desperation. Watson's Life of the Duke of Bucks.

5. To put forward beyond a line.

Edging by degrees their chairs forwards, they were in a little time got up close to one another. Locke.

To EDGE. v. n. [perhaps from eb, back-ward, Saxon.] To move forward against any power; going close upon a wind, as if upon its skirts or border, and so sailing slow.

I must edge upon a point of wind,
And make slow way. Dryden's Cleopatra

E'DGED. participial adj. [from edge.] Sharp; not blunt.

We find that subtle or edged quantities do prevail over blunt ones. Digby on Bodies.

E'DGELESS. adj. [from edge.] Blunt; obtuse; unable to cut.

To-morrow in the battle think on me,
And fall thy edgeless sword; despair and die. Shakespeare's Richard III.

They are edgeless weapons it hath to encounter. Deceit of Piety.

E'DGETOOL. n. f. [edge and tool.] A tool made sharp to cut.

EDI

There must be no playing with things sacred,
no jesting with edgetools. L'Estrange.
Nurses from their children keep edgetools. Dorset.

I shall exercise upon steel, and its several sorts; and what sort is fittest for edgetools, which for springs. Moxon.

E'DGEWISE. adv. [edge and wise.] With the edge put into any particular direction.

Should the flat side be objected to the stream, it would be soon turned edgewise by the force of it. Ray.

E'DGING. n. f. [from edge.]

1. What is added to any thing by way of ornament.

The garland which I wove for you to wear,
And border'd with a rosy edging round. Dryden.
A woman branches out into a long dissertation upon the edging of a petticoat. Addison's Spect.

2. A narrow lace.

E'DIBLE. adj. [from edo, Latin.] Fit to be eaten; fit for food.

Some Beth is not edible, as horses and dogs. Baron.

Wheat and barley, and the like, are made either edible or potable by man's art and industry. More against Atheism.

Some of the fungus kind, gathered for edible mushrooms, have produced a difficulty of breathing. Arbuthnot.

The edible creation decks the board. Prior.

E'DICT. n. f. [edictum, Latin.] A proclamation of command or prohibition; a law promulgated.

When an absolute monarch commanded his subjects that which seemeth good in his own discretion, hath not his edict the force of a law? Hooker.

The great King of kings

Hath in the table of his law commanded
That thou shalt do no murder; will you then Spurn at his edict, and fulfil a man's. Shaksp.
Severe decrees may keep our tongues in awe,
But to our thoughts what edict can give law? Dryden.

The ministers are always preaching, and the governours putting out edicts, against gaming and fine cloaths. Addison.

EDIFICA'TION. n. f. [edificatio, Latin.]

1. The act of building up man in the faith; improvement in holiness.

Our blessed Saviour told us, that we must account for every idle word, not meaning that every word not designed for edification, or less prudent, shall be reckoned for a sin. Taylor.

2. Improvement; instruction.

Out of these magazines I shall supply the town with what may tend to their edification. Addison's Guardian.

E'DIFICE. n. f. [edificium, Latin.] A fabrick; a building; a structure.

My love was like a fair house built on another man's ground; so that I have lost my edifice by mistaking the place where I erected it. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor

God built

So spacious, and his line stretch'd out so far,
That man may know he dwells not in his own;
An edifice too large for him to fill. Milton.

The edifice, where all were met to see him,
Upon their heads and on his own he pull'd. Milton.

As Tuscan pillars owe their original to this country, the architects always give them a place in edifices raised in Tuscany. Addison on Italy.

He must be an idiot that cannot discern more strokes of workmanship in the structure of an animal than in the most elegant edifice. Bentley.

EDIFIER. n. f. [from edify.] One that improves or instructs another.

To EDIFY. v. a. [edifico, Latin.]

1. To build.

EDU

There was a holy chapel edify'd,
Wherein the hermit wont to say
His holy things each morn and eventide. Spenser.

Men have edify'd

A lofty temple, and perfume'd an altar to thy name. Chapman.

2. To instruct; to improve.

He who speaketh no more than edifyeth, is undeservedly reprehended for much speaking. Hooker.

Men are edified, when either their understanding is taught somewhat whereof, in such actions, it behoveth all men to consider, or when their hearts are moved with any affection suitable thereunto. Hooker.

Life is no life, without the blessing of a friendly and an edifying conversation. L'Estrange.

He gave, he taught; and edify'd the more,
Because he shew'd, by proof, 'twas easy to be poor. Dryden.

3. To teach; to persuade. This is now either obsolete or ludicrous.

You shall hardly edify me, that those nations might not, by the law of nature, have been subdued by any nation that had only policy and moral virtue. Bacon's Holy War.

E'DILE. n. f. [adilis, Latin.] The title of a magistrate in old Rome, whose office seems in some particulars to have resembled that of our justices of peace.

The edile, ho! let him be apprehended. Shakespeare.

EDITION. n. f. [editio, Latin.]

1. Publication of any thing, particularly of a book.

This English edition is not so properly a translation, as a new composition upon the same ground. Bovart.

2. Republication: generally with some revival or correcting.

These are of the second edition. Shakespeare.
The business of our redemption is to rub over the defaced copy of the creation, to reprint God's image upon the soul, and to set forth nature in a second and a fairer edition. South.

I cannot go so far as he who published the first edition of him. Dryden's Fables, Preface.

The Code, composed hastily, was forced to undergo an emendation, and to come forth in a second edition. Baber.

EDITOR. n. f. [editor, Latin.] Publisher; he that revises or prepares any work for publication.

When a different reading gives us a different sense, or a new elegance in an author, the editor
does very well in taking notice of it. Addison.

This nonsense got into all the editions by a mistake of the stage editors. Pope.

To E'DUCATE. v. a. [duco, Latin.] To breed; to bring up; to instruct youth.

Their young succession all their cares employ;
They breed, they brood, instruct, and educate,
And make provision for the future state. Dryden's Virgil.

Education is worse, in proportion to the grandeur of the parents: if the whole world were under one monarch, the heir of that monarch would be the worst educated mortal since the creation. Sebast on Modern Education.

EDUCA'TION. n. f. [from educate.] Formation of manners in youth; the manner of breeding youth; nurture.

Education and instruction are the means, the one by use, the other by precept, to make out natural faculty of reason both the better and the sooner to judge rightly between truth and error, good and evil. Hooker.

All nations have agreed in the necessity of a strict education, which consisted in the observance of moral duties. Swift.

To EDUCE. v. a. [duco, Latin.] To bring out; to extract; to produce from a state of occultation.

That the world was educed out of the power of space, give that as a reason of its original: in this language, to grow rich, were to educe money out of the power of the pocket. Glauco.

This matter must have lain eternally confined to its beds of earth, were there not this agent to educe it thence. Woodward.

Th' eternal art educes good from ill, Grafts on this passion our best principle. Pope.

EDUCATION. n. f. [from educere.] The act of bringing any thing into view.

TO EDULCORATE. v. a. [from dulcis, Latin.] To sweeten. A chymical term.

EDULCORATION. n. f. [from edulcorate.] The act of sweetening.

TO ECK. v. a. [eacan, ecan, ican, Saxon; eak, Scottish; eck, Erie.]

1. To make bigger by the addition of another piece.

2. To supply any deficiency. See EKK.

Hence endless penance for our fault I pay; But that redoubled crime, with vengeance new, Thou biddest me to eke. Fairy Queen.

EEL. n. f. [æl, Saxon; aal, German.] A serpentine slimy fish, that lurks in mud.

Is the adder better than the eel, Because his painted skin contents the eye? Shakespeare.

The Cockney put the eel i' th' pasty alive. Shakespeare.

E'EN. adv. Contracted from even. See EVEN.

Says the satyr, if you have a trick of blowing hot and cold out of the same mouth, I have e'en done with you. L'Estrange.

EFF. n. f. Commonly written EPT. A small lizard.

EFFABLE. adj. [effabilis, Latin.] Expressive; utterable; that may be spoken. Did.

TO EFFACE. v. a. [effacer, French.]

1. To destroy any thing painted, or carved.

2. To make no more legible or visible; to blot out; to strike out.

Characters on dust, the first breath of wind effaces. Locke.

It was ordered, that his name should be effaced out of all publick registers. Addison.

Time, I said, may happily efface That cruel image of the king's disgrace. Prior.

Orway fail'd to polish or refine, And fluent Shakespeare scarce effac'd a line. Pope.

3. To destroy; to wear away.

Nor our admission shall your realm disgrace, Nor length of time our gratitude efface. Dryden.

EFFE'CT. n. f. [effectus, Latin.]

1. That which is produced by an operating cause.

You may see by her example, in herself wife, and of others beloved, that neither folly is the cause of vehement love, nor reproach the effect. Sidney.

Effect is the substance produced, or simple idea introduced into any subject, by the exerting of power. Locke.

We see the pernicious effects of luxury in the ancient Romans, who immediately found themselves poor as soon as this vice got footing among them. Addison on Italy.

2. Consequence; event.

No man, in effect, doth accompany with others, but he learneth, ere he is aware, some gesture, or voice, or fashion. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

To say of a celebrated piece that there are faults in it, is, in effect, to say that the author of it is a man. Addison.

3. Purpose; meaning; general intent.

They spake to her to that effect. Chapin.

4. Consequence intended; success; advantage.

Christ is become of no effect unto you. Gal.

He should depart only with a title, the effect whereof he should not be possessed of, before he deserved it. Clarendon.

The institution has hitherto proved without effect, and has neither extinguished crimes, nor lessened the numbers of criminals. Temple.

5. Completion; perfection.

Not so worthily to be brought to heroical effect by fortune or necessity, like Ulysses and Aeneas, as by one's own choice and working. Sidney.

Semblant art shall carve the fair effect, And full achievement of thy great designs. Prior.

6. Reality; not mere appearance.

In shew, a marvellous, indifferently composed senate ecclesiastical was to govern, but in effect one only man should, as the spirit and soul of the residue, do all in all. Hooker.

State and wealth, the business and the crowd, Seems at this distance but a darker cloud; And is to him, who rightly things esteems, No other in effect than what it seems. Denham.

7. [In the plural.] Goods; moveables.

What form of prayer Can serve my turn? Forgive me my foul murder! That cannot be, since I am still possessor Of those effects for which I did the murder, My crown, mine own ambition, and my queen. Shakespeare.

The emperor knew that they could not convey away many of their effects. Addison.

near so deeply as the quills of fowls, they are the more easily ejaculated. Gray.

The mighty magnet from the center darts
This strong, though subtle force, through all the parts:

Its active rays, ejaculated thence,
Irradiate all the wide circumference. Blackmore.

EJA'CLAT'ION. n. f. [from ejaculate.]

1. The act of darting or throwing out.

There seemeth to be acknowledged, in the act of envy, an ejaculation or irradiation of the eye.

Bacon's Essays.

There is to be observed, in those dissolutions which will not easily incorporate, what the effects are; as the ebullition, the precipitation to the bottom, the ejaculation towards the top, the suspension in the middle, and the like. Bacon.

2. A short prayer darted out occasionally, without solemn retirement.

In your dressing let there be ejaculations fitted to the several actions of dressing; as at washing your hands, pray God to cleanse your soul from sin. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.

EJA'CLATORY. adj. [from ejaculate.]

1. Suddenly darted out; uttered in short sentences.

The continuance of this posture might incline to ease and drowsiness; they used it rather upon some short ejaculatory prayers, than in their larger devotions. Duppa's Devotion.

2. Sudden; hasty.

We are not to value ourselves upon the merit of ejaculatory repentances, that take us by fits and starts. L'Estrange.

Is well ejected, when the conquer'd can. Milton.

The French king was again ejected when our king submitted to the church. Dryden.

3. To expel; to drive away; to dismiss with hatred.

We are peremptory to dispatch
This viperous traitor; to eject him hence
Were but our danger; and to keep him here;
Our certain death; therefore it is decreed
He dies to-night. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

4. To cast away; to reject.

To have ejected whatsoever the church doth make account of, be it even so harmless in itself, and of never so ancient continuance, without any other crime to charge it with, than only that it hath been the hap thereof to be used by the church of Rome, and not to be commanded in the word of God, could not have been defended. Hester.

Will any man say, that if the words whoring and drinking were by parliament ejected out of the English tongue, we should all awake next morning chaste and temperate. Swift.

EJE'CTION. n. f. [ejectio, Latin.]

1. The act of casting out; expulsion.

These stories are founded on the ejectio of the fallen angels from heaven. Broome.

2. [In physick.] The discharge of any thing by vomit, stool, or any other emundatory. Quincy.

EJE'CTMENT. n. f. [from eject.] A legal writ by which any inhabitant of a house, or tenant of an estate, is commanded to depart.

EIGH. interj. An expression of sudden delight.

EIGHT. adj. [eahta, Saxon; abta, Go-thick; asht, Scottish.] Twice four.
A word of number.

This island contains eight score and eight miles in circuit. Sandys's Journey.

EIGHTH. adj. [from eight.] Next in order to the seventh; the ordinal of eight.

Another yet?—A seventh! I'll see no more;
And yet the eight appears! Shakespeare.
In the eight month should be the reign of Saturn. Bacon.

I stay reluctant seven continued years,
And water her ambrosial couch with tears;
The eight the voluntarily moves to part,
Or urg'd by Jove, or her own changeful heart. Pope.

EI'GHTEN. adj. [eight and ten.] Twice nine.

He can't take two from twenty, for his heart,
And leave eighteen. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

If men naturally lived but twenty years, we should be satisfied if they died about eighteen;
and yet eighteen years now are as long as eighteen years would be then. Taylor.

EI'GHTEENTH. adj. [from eighteen.] The next in order to the seventeenth; twice ninth.

In the eighteenth year of Jeroboam died Abijam.
1 Kings.

EI'GHTFOLD. adj. [eight and fold.] Eight times the number or quantity.

EI'GHTHLY. adv. [from eight.] In the eight place.

Eightly, living creatures have voluntary motion, which plants have not. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

EI'GHTIETH. adj. [from eighty.] The next in order to the seventy-ninth;
eight tenth.

Some balances are so exact as to be sensibly turned with the eightieth part of a grain.
Wilkins's Math. Magic.

EI'GHTSCORE. adv. [eight and score.]
Eight times twenty; a hundred and sixty.

What! keep a week away? seven days and nights?

Eightscore eight hours? and lovers absent hours,
More tedious than the dial eightscore times?
Oh weary reckoning! Shakespeare's Othello.

EI'GHTY. adj. [eight and ten.] Eight times ten; fourscore.

Eighty odd years of sorrow have I seen,
And each hour's joy wreck'd with a week of tears.
Shakespeare.

Among all other climactericks three are most remarkable; that is, seven times seven, or forty-nine; nine times nine, or eighty-one; and seven times nine, or the year sixty-three, which is conceived to carry with it the most considerable fatality. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

EIGNE. adj. [aifne, Fr.] In law, it denotes the eldest or first born. Here it signifies unalienable, as being entailed.

It happeneth not seldom, that, to avoid the yearly oath, for aversion of the continuance of some estate for life, which is eigne, and not subject to forfeiture for the alienation that cometh after it, the party will offer to sue for a pardon uncompelled before the time; in all which, some mitigation of the uttermost value may well and worthily be offered. Bacon.

EI'SEL. n. f. [eoril, Saxon.] Vinegar, verjuice; any acid. An old word.

Cast in thy mind
How thou resemblest Christ, as with some poison,

If thou paine thy taste; remember therewithall,
How Christ for thee tasted eisel and gall.
Sir T. More.

EI'THER. pron. [æðer, Saxon; auter, Scottish.]

1. Whichever of the two; whether one or the other.

Lepidus flatters both,
Of both is flatter'd; but he neither loves,
Nor either cares for him. Shakespeare.

So like in arms these champions were,
As they had been a very pair;
So that a man would almost swear,
That either had been either. Drayton's Nymph.
Goring made a fast friendship with Digby, either of them believing he could deceive the other. Clarendon.

I do not ask whether bodies do so exist, that the motion of one body cannot really be without the motion of another: to determine this either way, is to beg the question for or against a vacuum. Locke.

2. Each; both.

In the process of natural beings, there seem some to be creatures placed, as it were, on the confines of several provinces, and participating something of either. Hale.

Sev'n times the sun has either tropick view'd,
The winter banish'd, and the spring renew'd.
Dryden's Virgil.

3. It is used sometimes of more than two; any one of a certain number.

4. Any of an indeterminate number, as in the following passage:

Henry VIII. Francis I. and Charles V. were so provident, as scarce a palm of ground could be gotten by either of the three, but that the other two would set the balance of Europe upright again. Bacon.

BR'THER. adv. [from the noun.] A dis- tributive adverb, answered by or: either the one or the other.

We never heard of any ship that had been seen to arrive upon any shore of Europe; no nor of either the East or West Indies. Bacon.

What perils shall we find,
If either place, or time, or other course,
Cause us to alter th' order now assign'd? Daniel.
Either your brethren have miserably deceived us, or power confers virtue. Swift to Pope.

EJULA'TION. n. f. [ejulatio, Lat.] Out- cry; lamentation; moan; wailing.

Instead of hymns and praises, he breaks out into ejulations and effeminate wailings.
Government of the Tongue.

With dismal groans
And ejulation, in the pangs of death,
Some call for aid. Philips.

EKE. adv. [eac, Saxon; ook, Dutch.] Also; likewise.

If any strength we have, it is to ill;
But all the good is God's both power and eke will.
Fairy Queen.

Now if 'tis chiefly in the heart
That courage does itself exert,
'Twill be prodigious hard to prove,
That this is eke the throne of love. Prior.

To EKE. v. a. [eacan, Saxon.]

1. To increase.

I dempt there much to have eked my store,
But such eking hath made my heart forsper. Spenser.

The little strength that I have, I would it were with you.
—And mine to eke out her's. Shakespeare.

2. To supply; to fill up deficiencies.

Still be kind,
And eke out our performance with your mind.
Shakespeare.

Your ornaments hung all,
On some patch'd doghole ek'd with ends of wall.
Pope.

3. To protract; to lengthen.

I speak too long; but 'tis to pierce the time,
To eke it, and to draw it out in length,
To stay you from election. Shakespeare.

4. To spin out by useless additions. In this sense it seems borrowed from the use of our old poets, who put eke into their lines, when they wanted a syllable.

Eufden ekes out Blackmore's endless line.

To ELA'BORATE. v. a. [elaboro, Lat.]

1. To produce with labour.

They in full joy elaborate a sigh. Young.
2. To heighten and improve by successive endeavours or operations.

The sap is diversified, and fill more elaborated and exalted, as it circulates through the vessels of the plant. Arbuthnot.

ELA'BORATE. adj. [elaboratus, Latin.] Finished with great diligence; perform- ed with great labour.

Formalities of extraordinary zeal and piety are never more studied and elaborate than when politicians most agitate desperate designs.
King Charles.

At least, on her bellow'd
Too much of ornament of outward shew Elaborate; of inward, less exact. Milton.

Man! thy theme, his virtue or his rage
Drawn to the life in each elab'rate page.
Waller.

Consider the difference between elaborate discourses upon important occasions, delivered to parliaments, and a plain sermon intended for the common people. Swift.

ELA'BORATELY. adv. [from elaborate.] Laboriously; diligently; with great study or labour.

Politick conceptions, so elaborately formed and wrought, and grown at length ripe for delivery, do yet prove abortive. South.

Some coloured powders, which painters use, may have their colours a little changed, by being very elaborately and finely ground. Newton.
I will venture once to incur the censure of some persons, for being elaborately trifling.

It is there elaborately shewn, that patents are good. Swift.

ELABORA'TION. n. f. [from elaborate.] Improvement by successive operations.

To what purpose is there such an apparatus of vessels for the elaboration of the sperm and eggs;
such a tedious process of generation and nutrition.
Ray.

To ELA'NCE. v. a. [elancer, French.] To throw out; to dart; to cast as a dart.

While thy unerring hand elanc'd
Another, and another dart, the people Joyfully repeated to! Prior.
Harsh words, that once elanc'd, must ever fly Irrevocable. Prior.

To ELA'PSE. v. n. [elapsus, Latin.] To glide away; to run out without notice.

There is a ductile season, a learning time in youth, which suffered to elapse, and no foundation laid, seldom returns. Clarissa.

ELA'STICAL. } adj. [from elax.] Hav- ing the power of re- turning to the form from which it is dis- torted or withheld; springy; having the power of a spring.

By what elastic engines did the rear
The starry roof, and roll the orbs in air.
Blackmore.

If the body is compact, and bends or yields inward to prestion, without any sliding of its parts, it is hard and elastic, returning to its
tion of its parts. Newton's Opticks.

The most common diversities of human constitutions arise from the solids, as to their different degrees of strength and tension; in some being too lax and weak, in others too elastic and strong. Arbuthnot on Ailments.

A fermentation must be excited in some assignable place, which may expand itself by its elastic power, and break through, where it meets with the weakest resistance. Bentley.

ELASTICITY. n. f. [from elastic.] Force in bodies, by which they endeavour to restore themselves to the posture from whence they were displaced by any ex- ternal force. Quincy.

A lute-string will bear an hundred weight without rupture; but at the same time cannot exert its elasticity: take away fifty, and immediately it raiseth the weight. Arbuthnot.

Me emptiness and dulness could inspire,
And were my elasticity and fire. Pope.

ELA'TE. adj. [elatus, Lat.] Flushed with success; elevated with prosperity; lofty; haughty.

Oh, thoughtless mortals! ever blind to fate!
Too soon dejected, and too soon elate!
I, of mind elate, and scornful fear,
Thus with new taunts insult the monster's ear.
Pope's Odyssey.

To E'LATE. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To elevate with success; to puff up with prosperity.

2. To exult; to heighten. An unusual sense.

Or truth, divinely breaking on his mind,
Elates his being, and unfolds his power. Thomson.

ELATERIUM. n. f. [Latin.] An in- spissated juice, light, of a friable texture and an acid and pungent taste. It is pro- cured from the fruit of a wild cucumber. It is a very violent and rough purge.

Hill.

ELA'TION. n. f. [from elate.] Haughti- ness proceeding from success; pride of prosperity.

God began to punish this vain elation of mind,
by withdrawing his favours. Atterbury.

E'LBOW. n. f. [elboga, Saxon.]

1. The next joint or curvature of the arm below the shoulder.

In some fair evening, on your elbow laid,
You dream of triumphs in the rural shade.
Pope.

2. Any flexure or angle.

Fruit trees, or vines, set upon a wall between elbows or buttresses of stone, ripen more than upon a plain wall. Bacon.

3. To be at the ELBOW. To be near; to be at hand.

Strait will he come;
Wear thy good rapier beare, and put it home;
Quick, quick; fear nothing, I'll be at thy elbow.
Shakespeare's Othello.

ELBOWCHAIR. n. f. [elbow and chair.] A chair with arms to support the elbows.

Swans and elbowchairs, in the opera of Dioclesian, have danced upon the English stage with good success. Gay.

E'LBOWROOM. n. f. [elbow and room.] Room to stretch out the elbows on each side; perfect freedom from confinement.

Now my soul hath elbowroom;
It would not out at windows nor at doors.
Shakespeare.

The natives are not so many, but that there may be elbowroom enough for them, and for the adventives also. Bacon.

A politician must put himself into a state of liberty to provide elbowroom for conscience to have its full play in. South.

To E'LBOW. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To push with the elbow.

One elbows him, one jostles in the shoal.
Dryden's Journal.

2. To push; to drive to a distance; to en- croach upon.

It thrusts and stretches out,
And elbows all the kingdoms round about.
Dryden.

ELD

If fortune takes not off this boy betimes, He'll make mad work and elbow out his neighbours. Dryden.

To E'ldow. v. n. To jut out in angles.
ELD. n. f. [eald, Saxon; eld, Scottish.]

1. Old age; decrepitude.
Her heart with joy unwonted inly (well'd
As feeling wond'rous comfort in her weaker old. Spenser.

Thy blazed youth
Becomes assuaged, and doth beg the alms
Of pallid eld. Shakespeare.
He thought it touch'd his deity full near,
If likewise he some fair one wedd'd not,
Thereby to wipe away th' infamous blot
Of long uncoupled bed and childless eld. Milton.

2. Old people; persons worn out with years.
They count him of the green-hair'd eld. Chapman.

E'LDER. n. f. [ellara, Saxon; sambucus.]
A tree.

The branches are full of pith, having but little wood: the flowers are monopetalous, divided into several segments, and expand in form of a rose: these are, for the most part, collected into an umbel, and are succeeded by soft succulent berries, having three seeds in each. Miller.
Look for thy reward
Amongst the nettles at the elder tree,
Which overshades the mouth of that same pit. Shakespeare.

E'LDER. adj. The comparative of eld, now corrupted to old. [ealb, ealbon, Saxon.] Surpassing another in years; survivor;
having the privileges of primogeniture:
opposed to younger.

They bring the comparison of younger daughters conforming themselves in attire to their elder sisters. Hooker.

Let still the woman take
An elder than herself; so wears she to him,
So sways the level in her husband's heart. Shaksp.
How I firmly am resolv'd, you know;
That is, not to bestow my youngest daughter
Before I have a husband for the elder. Shakespeare.

Among the Lacedemonians, the chief magistrates, as they were, so were they called, eldes
men. Raleigh's History.

The elder of his children comes to acquire a degree of authority among the younger, by the same means the father did among them. Temple.

Fame's high temple stands;
Stupendous pile; not rear'd by mortal hands!
Whate'er proud Rome, or artful Greece beheld,
Or elder Babylon, its frame excell'd. Pope.

E'LDERLY. adj. [from elder.] No longer young; bordering upon old age.

I have a race of orderly elderly people of both sexes at command, who can brawl when I am deaf, and tread softly when I am giddy. Swift.

E'LDERS. n. f. [from elder.]

1. Persons whose age gives them a claim to credit and reverence.

Rebuke not an elder, but intreat him as a father, and the younger men as brethren. 1 Tim.

Our elders say,
The barren, touch'd in this holy chafe,
Shake off their flend curse. Shakespeare.

The blushing youth their virtuous awe disclose,
And from their seats the reverend elders rose. Sandys.

2. Ancestors.

Says the goose, if it will be no better, e'en carry your head as your elders have done before you. L'Estrange.

I loose my patience, and I own it too,
Where works are censur'd, not as bad, but new;
While, in our elders break all reason's laws;
Those fools demand not pardon, but applause. Pope.

3. Those who are older than others.

ELE

Many nations are very superstitious and diligent observers of old customs, which they received by continual tradition from their parents, by recording of their hards and chronicles, in their songs, and by daily use and ensample of their elders. Spenser's State of Ireland.

At the board, and in private, it very well be-cometh children's innocency to pray, and their elders to say Amen. Hooker.

4. [Among the Jews.] Rulers of the people.

5. [In the New Testament.] Ecclesiasticks.

6. [Among presbyteriana.] Laymen introduced into the kirk-polity in sessions, presbyteries, synods, and assemblies.

Flea-bitten synod, an assembly brew'd
Of clerks and elders; ana; like the rude
Chorus of presbytry, where laymen ride
With the tame woulpack clergy by their side. Cleveland.

E'LDERSHIP. n. f. [from elder.]

1. Seniority; primogeniture.

The world, while it had scarcity of people, underwent no other dominion than paternity and eldership. Raleigh.

That all should Alihech adore, 'tis true;
But some respect is to my birthright due:
My claim to her by eldership I prove. Dryden.

Nor were the eldership
Of Artaxerxes worth our least of fears,
If Mernnon's interest did not prop his cause. Rowe.

2. Presbytery; ecclesiastical senate; kirk-session

That controversy sprang up between Beza and Erasmus, about the matter of excommunications; whether there ought to be in all churches an eldership, having power to excommunicate, and a part of that eldership to be of necessity certain chosen but from amongst the laity. Hooker.

E'LDERY. adj. The superlative of eld, now changed to old. [ealb, ealbon, ealorze, Saxon.]

1. The oldest; that has the right of primogeniture.

We will establish our estate upon
Our eldest Malcolm, whom we name hereafter
The prince of Cumberland. Shaksp. Macbeth.

The mother's and her eldest daughter's grace,
It seems, had brib'd him to prolong his space. Dryden.

2. That has lived most years.

Eldest parents signifies either the oldest mer-a id women that have had children, or those who have longest had issue. Locke.

ELCAMPANE. n. f. [belenium, Latin.] A plant, named also flarwort. Botanists enumerate thirty species. Miller.

The Germans have a method of candying ele- campane root like ginger, to which they prefer it, and call it German spice. Hill.

To ELE'CT. v. a. [electus, Latin.]

1. To choose for any office or use; to take in preference to others.

Henry his son is chosen king though young;
And Lewis of France, elect first beguill'd. Daniel.

This prince, in gratitude to the people, by whose consent he was chosen, elect a hundred senators out of the commoners. Swift.

2. [In theology.] To select as an object of eternal mercy.

ELE'CT. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Chosen; taken by preference from among others.

You have here, lady,
And of your choice, these reverend fathers,
Yea, the elect of the land, who are assembli'd
To plead your cause. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

2. Chosen to an office, not yet in possession.

The bishop elect takes the oaths of supremacy, canonical obedience, and against simony; and then the dean of the arches reads and subscribes the sentences. Ayliffe's Parragon.

3. [In theology.] Chosen as an object
of eternal mercy.

A vicious liver, believing that Christ died for none but the elect, shall have attempts made upon him to reform and amend his life. Hammond.

Some I have chosen of peculiar grace,
Elect above the rest: so is my will. Milton.

ELE'CTION. n. f. [electio, Latin.]

1. The act of choosing; the act of selecting one or more from a greater number for any use or office; choice.

If the election of the minister should be committed to every several parish, do you think that they would chuse the meetest? Watts.

Him, not thy election,
But natural necessity, begot. Milton.

As charity is, nothing can more increase the lustre and beauty than a prudent election of objects, and a fit application of it to them. Spratt.

2. The power of choice.

For what is man without a moving mind,
Which hath a judging wit, and chusing will?
Now if God's pow'r should her election bind,
Her motions then would cease, and stand all still. Darwin.

3. Voluntary preference.

He calls upon the sinners to turn themselves and live; he tells us, that he has set before us life and death, and referred it to our own election which we will chuse. Rogers.

4. Discernment; distinction; discrimination.

The discovering of these colours cannot be done but out of a very universal knowledge of things; which so cleareth mens judgment and election, as it is the less apt to slide into error. Bacon.

In favour, to use men with much difference and election is good: for it maketh those preferred more thankful, and the rest more officious. Bacon.

5. [In theology.] The predetermination of God by which any were selected for eternal life.

The conceit about absolute election to eternal life, some enthusiasts entertaining, have been made remits in the practice of virtue. Atterbury.

6. The ceremony of a publick choice.

I was sorry to hear with what partiality, and popular heat, elections were carried in many places.
King Charles.

Since the late dissolution of the club, many persons put up for the next election. Addison.

ELE'CTIVE. adj. [from elect.]

1. Regulated or bestowed by election or choice.

I will say positively and resolutely, that it is impossible an elective monarchy should be so free and absolute as an hereditary. Bacon.

The last change of their government, from elective to hereditary, has made it seem hitherto of less force, and unalter for action abroad. Temple.

2. Exerting the power of choice.

To talk of compelling a man to be good, is a contradiction; for where there is force, there can be no choice: whereas all moral goodness consisteth in the elective act of the understanding will. Grew's Cosmology in Sacra.

ELE'CTIVELY. adv. [from elect.] By choice; with preference of one to another.

How or why that should have such an influence upon the spirits, as to drive them into those muscles electively, I am not subtle enough to discern.
Ray on the Creation.

They work not electively, or upon propelling to themselves an end of their operations. Grew.

ELE'CTOR. n. f. [from elect.]

1. He that has a vote in the choice of any officer.

From the new world her silver and her gold
Came, like a tempest, to confound the old;
Feeding with these the brib'd electors' hopes,
Alone she gave us emperors and popes. Waller.
3. A prince who has a voice in the choice of the German emperor.

ELECTORAL. adj. [from elector.] Having the dignity of an elector.

ELECTORATE. n. f. [from elector.] The territory of an elector.

He has a great and powerful king for his son-in-law; and can himself command, when he pleases, the whole strength of an electorate in the empire. Adelphi's Freeholder.

ELECTRE. n. f. [electrum, Latin.]

1. Amber; which, having the quality when warmed by friction of attracting bodies, gave to one species of attraction the name of electricity, and to the bodies that so attract the epithet electric.

2. A mixed metal.

Change silver plate or vessel into the compound stuff, being a kind of silver electre, and turn the rest into coin. Bacon.

ELECTRICAL. adj. [from electrum.] ELECTRICK. adj. See ELECTRE.

1. Attractive without magnetism; attractive by a peculiar property, supposed once to belong chiefly to amber.

By electric bodies do I conceive not such only as take up light bodies, in which number the ancients only placed jett and amber; but such as, conveniently placed, attract all bodies palpable. Brown.

An electric body can by friction emit an exhalation so subtle, and yet so potent, as by its emission to cause no sensible diminution of the weight of the electric body, and to be expanded through a sphere, whose diameter is above two feet, and yet to be able to carry up lead, copper, or leaf-gold, at the distance of above a foot from the electric body. Newton.

2. Produced by an electric body.

If that attraction were not rather electric than magnetical, it was wonderful what Helmont delivered concerning a glass, wherein the magistracy of London was prepared, which retained an attractive quality. Brown.

If a piece of white paper, or a white cloth, or the end of one's finger, be held at about a quarter of an inch from the glass, the electric vapour, excited by friction, will, by dashing against the white paper, cloth, or finger, be put into such an agitation as to emit light. Newton's Opticks.

ELECTRICITY. n. f. [from electric. See ELECTRE.] A property in some bodies, whereby, when rubbed so as to grow warm, they draw little bits of paper, or such like substances, to them. Quincy.

Such was the account given a few years ago of electricity; but the industry of the present age, first excited by the experiments of Gray, has discovered in electricity a multitude of philosophical wonders. Bodies electrified by a sphere of glass, turned nimbly round, not only emit flame, but may be fitted with such a quantity of the electrical vapour, as, if discharged at once upon a human body, would endanger life. The force of this vapour has hitherto appeared instantaneous, persons at both ends of a long chain seeming to be struck at once. The philosophers are now endeavouring to intercept the strokes of lightning.

ELECTUARY. n. f. [electarium, Calius Aurel. which is now written electuary.] A form of medicine made of conserves and powders, in the consistence of honey.

Electuaries made up with honey or syrup, when the consistence is too thin, ferment; and when too thick, candy. By both which the ingredients will be altered or impaired. Quincy.

We meet with divers electuaries, which have no ingredient except sugar, common to any two of them. Boyle.

ELESOM'SYNARY. adj. [elismosynus, Gr.]

1. Living upon alms; depending upon charity. Not used.

It is little better than an absurdity, that the cause should be an elismosynary for its subsistence to its effects, as a nature posterior to and dependent on itself. Glanville's Scripps.

2. Given in charity. This is the present use.

ELEGANCE. n. f. [elegantia, Latin.]

ELEGANCY. n. f. [elegantia, Latin.]

1. Beauty rather soothing than striking; beauty without grandeur; the beauty of propriety not of greatness.

St. Augustine, out of a kind of elegancy in writing, makes some difference. Raleigh.

These questions have more propriety, and elegancy, understood of the old world. Burnet.

2. Any thing that pleases by its nicety. In this sense it has a plural.

My compositions in gardening are altogether Piadarick, and run into the beautiful wildness of nature, without the nicer elegancies of art. Spectator.

ELEGANT. adj. [elegans, Latin.]

1. Pleasing by minuter beauties.

Trifles themselves are elegant in him. Pope.
There may'st thou find some elegant retreat. London.

2. Nice; not coarse; not gross.

Polite with candour, elegant with ease. Pope.

ELEGANTLY. adv. [from elegant.]

1. In such a manner as to please.

Now read with them those organic arts which enable men to discourse and write perspicuously, elegantly, and according to the fittest style of lofty, mean, or lowly. Milton.

In a poem elegantly writ,
I will not quarrel with a slight mistake. Rifscannon.

2. Neatly; nicely; with minute beauty; with pleasing propriety.

They describe her in part finely and elegantly, and in part gravely and sententially. Bacon.

Whoever would write elegantly, must have regard to the different turn and juncture of every period: there must be proper distances and pauses. Pope's Odyssey, Notes.

ELEGI'ACK. adj. [elegiacus, Latin.]

1. Used in elegies.

2. Pertaining to elegies.

3. Mournful; sorrowful.

Let elegiac lay the woe relate,
Soft as the breath of distant flutes. Gay.

ELEGY. n. f. [elegus, Latin.]

1. A mournful song.

He hangs odes upon hawthorns, and elegies upon brambles, all furthest deifying the name of Rosalind. Shakspeare.

2. A funeral song.

So on Meander's banks, when death is nigh,
The mournful swan sings her own elegy. Dryden.

3. A short poem without points or affected elegancies.

ELEMENT. n. f. [elementum, Latin.]

1. The first or constituent principle of any thing.

If nature should intermit her course, those principal and mother elements of the world, whereof all things in this lower world are made, should lose the qualities which now they have. Hooker.

A man may rationally retain doubts concerning the number of those ingredients of bodies, which some call elements, and others principles. Boyle.

Simple substances are either spirits, which have no manner of composition, or the first principles of bodies, usually called elements, of which other bodies are compounded. Watts.

2. The four elements, usually so called, are earth, fire, air, water, of which our world is composed. When it is used alone, element commonly means the air.

The king is but a man: the violet smells to him as it doth to me; and the element shews to him as it doth to me. Shakspeare.

My dearest sister fare thee well;
The elements be kind to thee, and make Thy spirits all of comfort. Shakspeare.

The king,
Contending with the fierful elements,
Bids the wind blow the earth into the sea,
Or swell the curled waters. Shakspeare, King Lear.
The heavens and the earth will pass away, and the elements melt with fervent heat. Peter.

Here be four of you, able to make a good world; for you are as differing as the four elements. Bacon.

He from his flaming ship his children sent,
To perish in a milder element. Waller.

3. The proper habitation or sphere of any thing: as water of fish.

We are simple men; we do not know the works by charms, by spells, and such daubry as is beyond our element. Shakspeare.

Our torments may, in length of time,
Become our elements. Milton.

They shew that they are out of their element, and that logick is none of their talent. Baker on Learning.

4. An ingredient; a constituent part.

Who set the body and the limbs
Of this great sport together, as you guess?
—One sure that promises its element
In such a business. Shakspeare, Henry VIII.

5. The letters of any language.

6. The lowest or first rudiments of literature or science.

With religion it fareth as with other sciences; the first delivery of the elements thereof must, for like consideration, be framed according to the weak and slender capacity of young beginners. Hooker.

Every parish should keep a petty schoolmaster, which should bring up children in the first elements of letters. Spenser.

We, when we were children, were in bondage under the elements of the world. Gul.

There is nothing more pernicious to a youth, in the elements of painting, than an ignorant master. Dryden.

To E'LEMENT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To compound of elements.

Whether any one such body be met with, in those said to be elemented bodies, I now question. Boyle.

2. To constitute; to make as a first principle.

Dull sublimary, lover's love,
Whose soul is sense, cannot admit
Of absence, 'cause it doth remove
The thing which elemented it. Donne.

ELEMENTAL. adj. [from element.]

1. Produced by some of the four elements.

If dusky spots are vary'd on his brow,
And streak'd with red, 's troubl'd colour show;
That sullen mixture shall at once declare Winds, rain, and storms, and elemental war. Dryden's Virgil.

Soft yielding minds to water glide away,
And slip with nymphs, their elemental tea. Pope.

2. Arising from first principles.

Leeches are by some accounted poison, not properly, that is by temperamental contrivance, occult form, or so much as elemental repugnancy; but inwardly taken, they fallen upon the veins, and occasion an effusion of blood. Bacon.

ELEMENTARITY. n. f. [from elementary.] The simplicity of nature, or absence of composition; being uncompounded.

A very large class of creatures in the earth, far above the condition of elementarity. Brown.

ELEMENTARY. adj. [from element.]

1. Uncompounded; having only one principle or constituent part.

All rain water contains in it a copious sediment of terrestrial matter, and is not a simple elementary water. Ray.

The elementary salts of animals are not the same as they appear by distillation. Arbucknot.

2. Initial; rude.

ELEMI. n. f.

This drug is improperly called gum elemi, being a resin. The genuine elemi is brought from Athiopia in flattish masses, or in cylinders, of a yellowish colour. It is very rare in Europe, and supposed to be produced by a tree of the olive kind. The spurious or American elemi, almost the only kind known, is of a whitish colour, with a greater or less greenish or yellowish tinge. It proceeds from a tall tree, which the Brazilians wound, and collect the resin. Hill's Mat. Med.

ELENCH. n. f. [elenchus, Lat.] An argument; a sophism.

The first delusion Satan put upon Eve, and his whole temptation might be the same elench continued, as when he said, Ye shall not die; that was, in his equivocation, you shall not incur present death. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Discover the fallacies of our common adversary, that old sophist, who puts the most abusive elenchs on us. Decay of Piety.

ELEOTS. n. f. Some name the apples in request in the cider countries so; not known by that name in several parts of England. Mortimer's Husbandry.

ELEPHANT. n. f. [elephas, Latin.]

1. The largest of all quadrupeds, of whose sagacity, faithfulness, prudence, and even understanding, many surprising relations are given. This animal feeds on hay, herbs, and all sorts of pulse; and is said to be extremely long lived. He is supplied with a trunk, or long hollow cartilage, which hangs between his teeth, and serves him for hands. His teeth are the ivory. Calmet.

He loves to hear,
That unicorns may be betray'd with trees,
And bears with glassies, elephants with holes. Shakspeare.

The elephant bath joints, but not for courtesy;
His legs are for necessity, not figure. Shakspeare.

2. Ivory; the teeth of elephants.

High o'er the gate, in elephant and gold,
The crowd shall Cæsar's Indian war behold. Dryden's Virgil.

ELEPHANTIASIS. n. f. [elephantiasis, Latin.] A species of leprosy, so called from covering the skin with incrustations like those on the hide of an elephant.

ELPHA'NTINE. adj. [elephantinus, Lat.] Pertaining to the elephant.

TO ELEVATE. v. a. [elevo, Latin.]

1. To raise up aloft.

This subterranean heat or fire, which elevates the water out of the abyss. Woodward.

2. To exalt; to dignify.

3. To raise with great conceptions.

Others apart sat on a hill retir'd,
In thoughts more elevated, and reason'd high
Of providence, foreknowledge, will, and fate. Milton.

In all that great extent, wherein the mind wanders, in those remote speculations it may seem to be elevated with, it stirs not beyond sense or reflection. Locke.

Now rising fortune elevates his mind,
He shines unclouded, and adorns mankind. Savage.

4. To elate with vitious pride.

To mischief swift, hope elevates, and joy
Brightens his crest. Milton.

5. To lessen by detraction. This sense, though legitimately deduced from the Latin, is not now in use.

When the judgments of learned men are alledged against you, what do they but either elevate their credit, or oppose unto them the judgments of others as learned? Hooker.

ELEVATE. part. adj. [from elevated.] Exalted; raised aloft.

On each side an imperial city stood,
With towers and temples proudly elevate
On seven small hills. Milton.

ELEVATION. n. f. [elevatio, Latin.]

1. The act of raising aloft.

The disruption of the strata, the elevation of some, and depression of others, did not fall out by chance, but were directed by a discerning principle. Woodward.

2. Exaltation; dignity.

Angels, in their several degrees of elevation above us, may be endowed with more comprehensive faculties. Locke.

3. Exaltation of the mind by noble conceptions.

We are therefore to love him with all possible application and elevation of spirit, with all the heart, soul, and mind. Norris.

4. Exaltation of style.

His style was an elegant perspicuity, rich of phrase, but seldom any bold metaphors; and so far from tumid, that it rather wanted a little elevation. Wotton.

5. Attention to objects above us.

All which different elevations of spirit unto God, are contained in the name of prayer. Hooker.

6. The height of any heavenly body with respect to the horizon.

Some latitudes have no canicular days, as those which have more than seventy-three degrees of northern elevation, as Nova Zembla. Brown.

ELEVATOR. n. f. [from elevate.] A raiser or lifter up, applied to some surgical instruments put to such uses. Quincy.

ELEVEN. adj. [and elepen, Saxon.] Ten and one; one more than ten.

Had I a dozen sons, and none less dear than Marcus, I had rather eleven die nobly for their country, than one voluptuously surfeit out of action. Shakspeare.

ELEVENTH. adj. [from eleven.] The next in order to the tenth.

In the eleventh chapter he returns to speak of the building of Babel. Raleigh's History.

ELF. n. f. plural elves. [elf, Welch. Baxter's Gloss.]

1. A wandering spirit, supposed to be seen in wild unfrequented places; a fairy.

Through this house give glimmering light,
By the dead and drowly fire;
Every elf, and fairy sprite,
Hop as light as bird from brier. Shakspeare.

Whose midnight revels by some forest side,
Or fountain, some belated peasant sees,
Or dreams he sees. Milton.

The king of elfs and little fairy queen
Gambol'd on heaths, and danc'd on ev'ry green. Dryden.

If e'er one vision touch'd thy infant thoughts,
Of all the nurse and all the priest have taught;
Of airy elves by moon-light shadow seen,
The silver token, and the circled green. Pope.

2. A devil.

That we may angels seem, we paint them elves; And are but satires to set up ourselves. Dryden.

However it was civil, an angel or elf;
For he ne'er could have fill'd it so well of himself. Swift.

TO ELF. v. a. [from the noun.] To entangle hair in so intricate a manner, that it is not to be unravelled. This the vulgar have supposed to be the work of fairies in the night; and all hair so matted together, hath had the name of elf-locks. Hammer.

My face I'll grime with filth,
Blanket my loins, elf all my hair in knots. Shakspeare.

ELFV. adj. [from elf.] Relating to fairies; elfish; belonging to elves.

Now when that idle dream was to him brought,
Unto that elfv knight he bade him fly,
Where he slept soundly. Spenser.

ELFLOCK. n. f. [elf and lock.] Knots of hair twisted by elves.

This is that very Mab,
That plats the manes of horses in the night,
And cokes the elf-locks in foul sluttish hairs,
Which once untangl'd, much misfortune bodes. Shakspeare.

TO ELICITE. v. a. [elicio, Latin.] To strike out; to fetch out by labour or art.

Although the same truths may be elicited, and explicated by the contemplation of animals, yet they are more clearly evidenced in the contemplation of man. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

He elicits those acts out of the meer lapied state of human nature. Cheyne.

ELICIT. adj. [elicitus, Latin.] Brought into act; brought from possibility to real existence.

It is the virtue of humility and obedience, and not the formal elicit act of meekness; meekness being ordinarily annexed to these virtues. Ham.

The schools dispute whether, in morals, the external action superadds any thing of good or evil to the internal elicit act of the will. South.

ELICITATION. n. f. [from elicio, Latin.]

That elicitation which the schools intend, is a deducing of the power of the will into act: that drawing which they mention, is merely from the appetibility of the object. Bramhall.

TO ELIDE. v. a. [elido, Latin.] To break in pieces; to crush.

We are to cut off that whereunto they, from whom these objections proceed, fly for defence, when the force and strength of the argument is elided. Hooker.

ELIGIBILITY. n. f. [from eligible.] Worthiness to be chosen.

The business of the will is not to judge concerning the nature of things, but to choose them in consequence of the report made by the understanding, as to their eligibility or goodness. Fiddes' Sermans.

ELIGIBLE. adj. [eligibilis, Latin.] Fit to be chosen; worthy of choice; preferable.

A British ministry ought to be satisfied, if, allowing to every particular man that his private scheme is wisest, they can persuade him, that next to his own plan, that of the government is the most eligible. Addison's Freeholder.

Did they really think, that going on with the war was more eligible for their country than the least abatement of those conditions? Swift.

That the most plain, short, and lawful way to any good end, is more eligible than one directly contrary in some or all of these qualities. Swift.

Certainty, in a deep distress, is more eligible than suspense. Clayton.

ELIGIBLENESS. n. f. [from eligible.] Worthiness to be chosen; preferableness.

ELIMINATION. n. f. [elimino, Latin.] The act of banishing; the act of turning out of doors; rejection. Diff.

ELISION. n. f. [eliso, Latin.]

1. The act of cutting off: as, can't the attempt, there is an elision of a syllable. You will observe the abbreviations and elisions, by which consonants or most obdurate sounds are joined together, without any following vowel to intervene. Satj.

2. Division; separation of parts.

The cause given of sound, that it would be an elision of the air, whereby, if they mean any thing, they mean a cutting or dividing, or else an attenuating of the air, is but a term of ignorance. Lucan.

ELIXATION. n. f. [elixur, Latin.] The act of boiling or stewing any thing.

Even to ourselves, and more perfect animals, water performs no substantial nutrition; serving for refrigeration, dilution of solid aliments, and its eluxion in the stomach. Brown.

ELIXIR. n. f. [Arabic.]

1. A medicine made by strong infusion, where the ingredients are almost dissolved in the menstruum, and give it a thicker consistence than a tincture. Quincy.

For when no healing art prevail'd,
When cordials and elixirs fail'd,
On your pale cheek he dropp'd the show'r,
Reviv'd you like a dying flower. Waller.

2. The liquor, or whatever it be, with which chymists hope to transmute metals to gold.

No chymist yet the elixir got,
But glorifies his pregnant pot,
If by the way to him befall
Some odorous thing, or medicinal. Deane.

3. The extract or quintessence of any thing.

In the soul, when the supreme faculties move regularly, the inferior passions and affections following, there arises a serenity infinitely beyond the highest quintessence and elixir of worldly delight. South.

4. Any cordial; or invigorating substance.

What wonder then, if fields and regions here Breathe forth elixir pure! Milton's Par. Lost.

ELK. n. f. [ælc, Saxon.] A large and stately animal of the stag kind. The neck is short and slender; the ears nine inches in length, and four in breadth. The colour of its coat in winter is greyish, in summer it is paler. The horns of the male are short and thick near the head, where it by degrees expands into a great breadth, with several prominences in its edges. Hill.

And, scarce his head
Rais'd o'er the heavy wreath, the branching elk
Lies slumbering silent in the white abyss. Thomson.

ELL. n. f. [eln, Saxon.]

1. A measure containing forty-five inches, or a yard and a quarter.

They are said to make yearly forty thousand pieces of linen cloth, reckoning two hundred ells to the piece. Addison.

2. It is taken proverbially for a long measure.

Acquit thee bravely, play the man;
Look not on pleasures as they come, but go:
Defer not the last virtue; life's poor span
Makes not an ell by tridling in thy woe. Herbert.

ELLIPSIS. n. f. [ἑλλειψις.]

1. A figure of rhetoric, by which something is left out necessary to be supplied by the hearer: as, the thing I love, for the thing which I love.

The words are delivered by way of ellipsis, Hammond.

2. [In geometry.] An oval figure, being generated from the section of a cone, by a plane cutting both sides of the cone, but not parallel to the base, which produces a circle, and meeting with the base when produced. Harris.

On the cylinder inclined, describe an ellipsis parallel to the horizon. Watson's Dædalion.

The planets could not possibly acquire such revolutions in circular orbits, or in ellipses very little eccentric. Bentley.

ELLIPTICAL. } adj. [from ellipsis.] Having the form of an ellipse.
ELLIPTICK. } ing the form of an ellipse; oval.

Since the planets move in elliptical orbits in one of whose foci the sun is, and by a radius from the sun describe equal areas in equal times, which no other law of a circulating fluid, but the harmonical circulation, can account for; we must find out a law for the paracentric motion, that may make the orbits elliptical. Chyene.

In animals, that gather food from the ground, the pupil is oval or elliptical; the greatest diameter going transversely from side to side. Chyene's Phil. Prin.

ELM. n. f. [almus, Lat. elm, Saxon.]

1. A tree.

The species are, the common rough-leaved elm; the witch hazel, or broad-leaved elm, by some called the British elm; the smooth-leaved or witch elm. Neither of them were originally natives of this country; but they have propagated themselves by seeds and suckers in such plenty as hardly to be rooted out; especially in hedgerows, where there is harbour for their roots. They are very proper to place in hedgerows, upon the borders of the fields, where they will thrive better than when planted in a wood or close plantation, and their shade will not be very injurious to whatever grows under them; for they may be trained up in form of an hedge, keeping them cut every year, to the height of forty or fifty feet; but they should not be planted too near fruit trees: because the roots of the elm will intermix with the roots of other trees, and deprive them of nourishment. Miller.

The rural seat,
Whose lofty elms and venerable oaks,
Invite the rook, who high amid' the boughs,
In early spring, his airy city builds. Thomson.

2. It was used to support vines, to which the poets allude.

Thou art an elm, my husband; I a vine,
Whose weakness married to thy stronger state,
Makes me with thy strength to communicate. Shakespeare.

ELOCUTION. n. f. [elocutio, Latin.]

1. The power of fluent speech.

A travelled doctor of physick, of bold, and of able elocution. Wotton.

2. Power of speaking; speech.

Whose taste, too long forborne, at first essay Gave elocution to the mutes, and taught
The tongue not made for speech to speak thy praise. Milton.

3. The power of expression or diction; eloquence; beauty of words.

The third happiness of his poet's imagination is elocution, or the art of cloathing or adorning that thought so found, and varied, in apt, significant, and sounding words. Dryden.

As I have endeavoured to adorn it with noble thoughts, so much more to express those thoughts with elocution. Dryden.

ELOGE. n. f. [elogé, French.] Praise; panegyrick.

Buckingham lay under millions of maledictions, which at the prince's arrival did vanish into praises and elogies. Wotton.

If I durst say all I know of the elogies received concerning him, I should offend the modesty of our author. Boyle.

Some excellent persons, above my approbation of elogy, have considered this subject. Hollier's Elements of Speech.

TO ELOIGNER. v. a. [eloigner, French.]

To put at a distance; to remove one far from another. Now disused.

From worldly care himself he did eloin,
And greatly shunned manly exercise. F. Queen.
I'll tell thee now, dear love! what thou shalt do
To anger destiny, as she doth us;
How I shall stay though she elogne me thus,
And how posterity shall know it too. Deane.

TO ELONGATE. v. a. [from longus, Latin.]

1. To lengthen; to draw out; to protract; to stretch.

2. To put further off.

The first star of Aries in the time of Meton the Athenian, was placed in the very intersection which is now elongated and moved eastward twenty-eight degrees. Brown.

TO ELONGATE. v. n. To go off to a distance from any thing.

About Cape Frio in Brasilia, the south point of the compass varieth twelve degrees unto the west; but elongating from the coast of Brasilia, towards the shore of Africa, it varieth eastward. Brown.

ELONGATION. n. f. [from elongate.]

1. The act of stretching or lengthening itself.

To this motion of elongation of the fibres, is owing the union or conglutination of the parts of the body, when they are separated by a wound. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. The state of being stretched.

3. [In medicine.] An imperfect luxation, when the ligament of any joint is so extended or relaxed as to lengthen the limb, but yet not let the bone go quite out of its place. Quincy.

Elongation are the effect of an humour soaking upon a ligament, thereby making it liable to be stretched, and to be thrust quite out upon every little force. Wise man's Surgery.

4. Distance; space at which one thing is distant from another.

The distant points in the celestial expanse appear to the eye in so small a degree of elongation from another, as bears no proportion to what is real. Glanville's Scylla.

5. Departure; removal.

Nor then had it been placed in a middle point, but that of descent or elongation. Brown.

TO ELOPE. v. a. [loopen, to run, Dut.]

To run away; to break loose; to escape from law or restraint.

It is necessary to treat women as members of the body politic, since great numbers of them have eloped from their allegiance. Addison.

What from the dame can Paris hope?
She may as well from him elope. Prior.

The fool whole wife elopes some three quarters,
For matrimonial solace dies a martyr. Pope.

ELOPEMENT. n. f. [from elope.] Departure from just restraint; rejection of lawful power; commonly used of a wife.

An elopement is the voluntary departure of a wife from her husband to live with an adulterer, and with whom she lives in breach of the matrimonial vow. Addison's Paragon.

The negligent husband, trusting to the efficacy of his principle, was undone by his wife's elopement from him. Arbuthnot.

E'LOPS. n. f. [elops, Latin.] A fish: reckoned however by Milton among the serpents.

Scorpion and asp, and amphibena dire,
Cerafies horn'd, hydrus, and elops drear,
And dipsas. Milton's Par. Lost.

E'LOQUENCE. n. f. [eloquentia, Latin.]

1. The power of speaking with fluency and elegance; oratory.

Action is eloquence, and the eyes of the ignorant

More learned than the ears. Shaksp. Coriolanus.

Athens or free Rome, where eloquence Flourish'd, since mute. Milton.

His infant softness pleads a milder doom,
And speaks with all the eloquence of tears. Heigh.

2. Elegant language uttered with fluency.

Say the be mute, and will not speak a word;

Then I'll commend her volubility, Shaksp.

And say she uttered piercing eloquence.

Fit words attended on his weighty sense,
And mild persuasion flow'd in eloquence. Pope.

E'LOQUENT. adj. [eloquens, Latin.] Having the power of oratory; having the power of fluent and elegant speech.

The Lord of hosts doth take away the captain of fifty, and the honourable man, and the counsellor, and the cunning artificer, and the eloquent orator. Isaiah.

Oh death! all eloquent, you only prove
What dust we dote on, when 'tis man we love. Pope.

ELSE. pronoun. [elley, Saxon.] Other; one beside: it is applied both to persons and things.

To stand stained with travel, and sweating with desire to see him; thinking of nothing else, putting all affairs else in oblivion, as if there were nothing else to be done but to see him. Shaksp.

Should he or any else search, he will find evidence of the Divine Wisdom. Hale.

He says, 'twas then with him, as now with you;
He did it when he had nothing else to do. Denham.

ELSE. adv.

1. Otherwise.

Dare not, on thy life,
Touch ought of mine beside, by lot my due,
But stand aloof, and think profane to view:
This fauchion, else, not hitherto withstood,
These hostile fields shall fatten with thy blood. Dryden.

What ways are there whereby we should be assured, but either by an internal impression of the notion of a God upon our minds, or else by such external and visible effects as our reason tells us must be attributed to some cause? Tillotson.

2. Beside; except that mentioned.

Pleasures which no where else were to be found,
And all Elysium in a spot of ground. Dryden.

3. It has sometimes or before it superfluously.

Be more abstemious,
Or else good night your vow. Shakspere.

E'LSWHERE. adv. [else and where.]

1. In any other place.

There are here divers trees, which are not to be found elsewhere. Abbot's Descrip. of the World.

As he proved that Pison was not Ganges, or Gehon, Nilus; so where to find them elsewhere he knew not. Raleigh's History.

For, if we chance to fix our thoughts elsewhere,
Though our eyes open be, we cannot see. Davies.

Henceforth oracles are ceas'd,
And thou no more with pomp and sacrifice
Shall be enquir'd at Delphos, or elsewhere. Milton.

Although seasoned bodies may and do live near as long in London as elsewhere, yet new-comers and children do not. Grant.

2. In other places; in some other place.

They which elsewhere complain, that injury is offered to the meanest minister, when the magistrate appointeth him what to wear, think the gravest prelates no competent judges where it is fit for the minister to stand. Hooker.

Let us no more contend, nor blame
Each other, blam'd enough elsewhere. Milton.

Bestow, base man, thy idle threats elsewhere;
My mother's daughter knows not how to fear. Dryden.

If it contradict what he says elsewhere, it is no new or strange thing. Tillotson.

To E'LU'CIDATE. v. a. [elucido, Latin.]

To explain; to clear; to make plain.

To elucidate a little the matter, let us consider it. Boyle.

E'LU'CIDA'TION. n. f. [from elucidate.]

Explanation; expolition.

We shall, in order to the elucidation of this matter, subjoin the following experiment. Boyle.

E'LU'CIDA'TOR. n. f. [from elucidate.]

Explainer; expolitor; commentator.

Obscurity is brought over them by the course of ignorance and age, and yet more by their pedantic elucubrators. Abbot.

To E'LU'DE. v. a. [eludo, Latin.]

1. To escape by stratagem; to avoid any mischief or danger by artifice.

Several pernicious vices, notorious among us, escape or elude the punishment of any law yet invented. Swift.

He who looks no higher for the motives of his conduct than the resentments of human justice, whenever he can presume himself cunning enough to elude, rich enough to bribe, or strong enough to resist it, will be under no restraint. Rogers.

2. To mock by an unexpected escape.

Me gentle Delia beckons from the plain,
Then, hid in shades, eludes her eager swain;
But feigns a laugh to see me search around,
And by that laugh the willing fair is found. Pope.

E'LU'DIBLE. adj. [from elude.] Possible to be defeated.

There is not any common place more infested on than the happiness of trials by juries; yet if this blessed part of our law be eludible by power and artifice, we shall have little reason to boast. Swift.

ELVES. The plural of elf. See ELF.

Fairy elves
Whole midnight revels by some forest side,
Or fountain, some belated peasant sees,
Or dreams he sees. Milton.

Ye sylphs and sylphids to your chief give ear;
Fays, fairies, genii, elves and demons hear. Pope.

E'LV'ELock. n. f. [from elves and lock.]

Knots in the hair superstitiously supposed to be tangled by the fairies.

From the like might proceed the fears of polling elvelocks, or complicated hairs of the head. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

To EMBELLISH. v. a. [embellir, Fr.]
To adorn; to beautify; to grace with ornaments; to decorate.

How much more beauteous had the fountain been,

Embellish'd with her first created green;
Where crystal streams through living turf had run,
Contented with an urn of native stone. Dryden.
The names of the figures that embellish'd the discourses of those that understood the art of speaking are not the art and skill of speaking well.
Locke.

That which was once the most beautiful spot of Italy, covered with palaces, embellish'd by emperors, and celebrated by poets, has now nothing to shew
but ruins. Addison on Italy.

EMBE'LLISHMENT. n. f. [from embellish.]

For Friday, Saturn, and Wednesdays. Tupper.

EMBERS. n. f. without a singular [αμύρια, Saxon, ashes; cimyrus, Islandick, hot ashes or cinders.] Hot cinders; ashes not yet extinguished.

Take hot embers, and put them about a bottle filled with new beer, almost to the very neck:
let the bottle be well stopp'd, lest it fly out; and continue it, renewing the embers every day for the space of ten days. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

If the air will not permit,
Some still removed place will fit,
While glowing embers through the room
Tench light to counterfeit a gloom. Milton.

While thus heav'n's highest counsels, by the low Footsteps of their effects, he trac'd too well,
He tost his troubled eyes, embers that glow
Now with new rage, and was too hot for hell.
Crofton.

He said, and rose, as holy zeal inspires;
He takes hot embers, and renews the fires.
Dryden's Virgil.

EMBERWEEK. n. f. [The original of this word has been much controverted: some derive it from embers or ashes strewd by penitents on their heads; but Nelson decides in favour of Marechal, who derives it from ymbren or embren, a course or circumvolution.] A week in which an ember day falls.

The ember days at the four seasons are the Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday after the first vinegar, to embrocate her arm. Hifeman.

EMBROCATION. n. f. [from embrocate.]

1. The act of rubbing any part diseased with medicinal liquors or spirits.

2. The lotion with which any diseased part is washed or embrocated.

We endeavour'd to ease by discutient and emollient cataplasms, and embrocations of various sorts. Hifeman's Surgery.

TO EMBROIDER. v. a. [broder, Fr.]

To border with ornament; to decorate with figured work; to diversify with needlework; to adorn a ground with raised figures of needlework.

Such an accumulation of favours is like a kind of embroidering, or lifting of one favour upon another. Hifeman.

Embroider'd so with flowers it had stood,
That it became a garden of a wood. Waller.

Let no virgin be allowed to receive her lover,
but in a suit of her own embroidering. Speke.

Embroider'd purple clothes the golden beds;
This slave the floor, and that the table spreads.

Pope.

EMBROIDERER. n. f. [embroider.] One

Like sphire, pearl, in rich embroidery,
Buckled below fair knighthood's bending knee.

Shakespeare.

Laces and embroideries are more costly than either warm or comely. Bacon.

Next these a youthful train their vows express'd,
With feathers crown'd, with gay embroidery
dress'd. Pope.

2. Variegation; diversity of colours.

If the natural embroidery of the meadows were help'd and improv'd by art, a man might make a pretty landscape of his own possessions. Speke.

TO EMBROIL. v. a. [brouiller, French.]

1. To disturb; to confuse; to distract; to throw into commotion; to involve in troubles by dissension and discord.

I had no passion, design, or preparation to embroil my kingdom in a civil war. King Ch.

Rumour next, and chance,
And tumult and confusion, all embroil'd,
And discord with a thousand various mouths.

Milton.

When she found her venom spread so far,
The royal house embroil'd in civil war,
Rais'd on her dusky wings she cleaves the skies.

Dryden.

2. To perplex; to entangle.

The christian antiquities at Rome, though of a frether date, are so embroil'd with fable and legend, that one receives but little satisfaction.

Addison on Italy.

3. In the following passage the word seems improperly used for broil or burn.

That knowledge, for which we holdly attempt to rifle God's cabinet, should, like the coal from the altar, serve only to embroil and consume the sacrilegious invaders. Decay of Piety.

TO EMBROTHEL. v. a. [brothel, brodel.]

To enclose in a brothel.

Men, which chuse

Law practice for mere gain, boldly repute, sooner. Bacon.

An exclusion before conformation, before the birth can bear the name of the parent, or be so much as properly called an embryo. Brown.

The earth was form'd, but in the womb as yet
Of waters, embryo immature involv'd Appear'd not. Milton's Paradise Lost.

In that dark womb are the signs and instruments of an embryo world. Burnet's Theory.

When the crude embryo careful nature breeds,
See how the works, and how her work proceeds.

Blountmore.

While the promis'd fruit
Lies yet a little embryo, unperceiv'd
Within its crimson folds. Thomson's Spring.

2. The state of any thing yet not fit for

END. n. f. [end, Saxon.]

1. The extremity of the length of any thing materially extended. Of bodies that have equal dimensions we do not use end: the extremity of breadth is side.

Jonathan put forth the end of the rod that was in his hand, and dipt it in a honeycomb. 1 Samuel.

2. Extremity or last part in general.

The extremity and bounds of all bodies we have no difficulty to arrive at; but, when the mind is there, it finds nothing to hinder its progress into this endless expansion; of that it can neither find, nor conceive any end. Locke.

3. The last particle of any assignable duration.

Behold the day groweth to an end. Judges.
At the end of two months she returned. Judges.

If the world's age and death he argu'd well
By the sun's fall, which now towards earth doth bend,
Then we might fear, that virtue, since she fell
So low as woman, should be near her end. Donne.

+ The conclusion or cessation of any action.

Jacob had made an end of commanding his sons. Genesis.

Yet vainly most their age in study spend;
No end of writing books, and to no end. Denham.

The causes and designs of an action are the beginning: the effects of these causes, and the difficulties met with in the execution of these designs, are the middle; and the unravelling and resolution of these difficulties, are the end. Broome's Epic Poetry.

5. When end is not used materially, it is opposed to beginning.
Better is the end than the beginning thereof. Eccles.

6. The conclusion or last part of any thing; as, the end of a chapter; the end of a discourse.

7. Ultimate state; final doom.

drunken man, and are at their wits' end. Psalms.

9. Final determination; conclusion of debate or deliberation.
My guilt be on my head, and there's an end! Shakespeare.

10. Death; fate; decease.
I determine to write the life and the end, the nature and the fortunes of George Villiers. Hutton.

The soul receives intelligence,
By her near genius, of the body's end,
And so imparts a sadness to the sense. Daniel.
'Tis the great business of life to fit ourselves for our end, and no man can live well that hath not death in his eye. L'Estrange.

Remember Milo's end,
Wedg'd in that timber which he strove to rend. Roscommon.

My God, my father, and my friend,
Do not forsake me in my end. Roscommon.
Unbarm'd through life, lamented in thy end. Pope.

11. Cessation; period.
What is the sign of the end of the world?
Great houses shall have an end. Amos.

12. Limit; termination.
There is no end of the shore. Naham.

13. Abolition; total loss.
There would be an end of all civil government, if the assignment of civil power were by such institution. Locke.

14. Cause of death; destroyer.
Take heed you daily not before your king,
Left he that is the supreme King of kings,
Confound your hidden falsehood, and award
Liber of you to be the other's end. Shakespeare.

15. Consequence; conclusive event; conclusion.

O, that a man might know
The end of this day's business ere it come!
But it sufficeth that the day will end. Shakespeare.
The end of these things is death. Romans.

16. Fragment; broken piece.
Thus I clothe my naked villainy
With old odd ends, stol'n from holy writ,
And seem a saint. Shakespeare's Richard III.

17. Purpose; intention.
There was a purpose to reduce the monarchy to a republic, which was far from the end and purpose of that nation. Clarendon.
I have lov'd!

What can thy ends, malicious beauty, be?
Can he who kill'd thy brother, live for thee?
Dryden.

Heav'n, as its instrument, my courage lends; Heav'n ne'er sent those who fight for private ends. Dryden.

Others are apt to attribute them to some false end or intention. Addison's Spectator.

18. Thing intended; final design; the termination of intellectual prospect.
Wisdom may have fram'd one and the same thing to serve commodiously for divers ends, and of those ends any one may be sufficient cause for continuance, though the rest have ceased. Hosker.

All those things which are done by him, have some end for which they are done; and the end for which they are done, is a reason of his will to do them. Hosker.

Her only end is never-ending bliss;
Which is, the eternal face of God to see,
Who last of ends and first of causes is;
And to do this, she must eternal be. Davies.
The end of the commandment is charity. 1 Timothy.

Two things I shall propound to you, as ends;
since the wife men of this world have made them
theirs. Suckling.

Such conditions did fully comply with all those ends, for which the parliament had first taken up arms. Clarendon.

Hear and mark
To what end I have brought thee hither. Milton.
Life, with my Indamora, I would chuse;
But, losing her, the end of living lose. Dryden.
For when success a lover's toil attends,
Few ask if fraud or force attain'd his ends. Pope.
The end of our fast is to please God, and make him propitious. Smalridge.

19. An END. [Probably corrupted from on end.] Upright; erect: as, his hair stands an end.

20. An END has a signification in low language not easily explained; as, most an end, commonly: perhaps it is properly an end, at the conclusion; or corrupted from some old word not easily recoverable.

Stay't thou to vex me here?
Slave, that, still an end, turns me to shame!
Shakespeare.

To END. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To terminate; to conclude; to finish.
They have ended all my harvest. Ruth.
He would in one battle end quarrel with them, either win or lose the empire. Knollys.
That expensive war under which we have so long groan'd, is not yet ended. Smalridge.

2. To destroy; to put to death.
The lord of Stafford dear to-day hath bought Thy likeness; for instead of that, king Harry,
This sword hath ended him. Shakespeare.

To END. v. a.
1. To come to an end; to be finished.
Then ease your weary Trojans will attend,
And the long labours of your voyage end. Dryden's Æneid.

2. To die. [termino.]
Yet happy where my death, mine ending blest,
If this I could obtain, that breath to breath,
Thy bosom might receive my yielded spirit. Fairfax.

3. To terminate; to conclude.
Our laughing, if it be loud and high, commonly ends in a deep sigh; and all the instances of pleasure have a sting in the tail. Taylor.

4. To cease; to fail.
His sovereignty, built upon either of these titles, could not have descended to his heir, but must have ended with him. Locke.

5. To conclude action or discourse.
The angel ended, and in Adam's ear
So charming left his voice. Milton.

To ENDA'MAGE. v. a. [from damage.]
To mischief; to prejudice; to harm.
Nor ought he call'd whom he endamaged.
By tortuous wrong, or whom bereav'd of right. Spenser's Fairy Queen.

It cometh sometime to pass, that a thing unnecessary in itself doth notwithstanding appear convenient to be still held, even without use, left by reason of that coherence which it hath with somewhat most necessary, the removal of the one should endamage the other. Hosker.

Where your good word cannot advantage him,
Your slander never can endamage him. Shaksp.
Gather our soldiers, scatter'd and dispers'd,
And lay new platforms to endamage them. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

The trial hath endamaged thee no way;
Rather more honour left, and more esteem. Milton.

When an erroneous opinion is published, the
